Ellms Meadow Wellfield to be reactivated

The Water Commission will be holding a groundbreaking ceremony on Sunday, Aug. 14, at 1 p.m., for a new pumphouse to be installed at the Ellms Meadow Wellfield. The groundbreaking, which will take place at the wellfield located off James Lane, is open to the public.

"Construction of the new Ellms Meadow Pumphouse," said water commission chairman Glenn Pratt, "will allow us to reactivate the Ellms Meadow Wellfield, which has not been in use since 1995." The wellfield is expected to be back on line by the end of the year.

"Reactivation of the wellfield will not only provide the Cohasset Water Department with an emergency water supply," Pratt noted, "but will also provide a source of high quality water, which when blended with the current supply, will help improve drinking water quality," he added.

Aquarion calls for voluntary outdoor water conservation

Aquarion Water Company of Massachusetts, which serves North Cohasset, is calling for its customers to voluntarily reduce outdoor watering activities, effective immediately. The move is due to high water demands the company has experienced along with the recent weather patterns consisting of extended hot and dry periods.

If the voluntary measures do not reduce demand, Aquarion will then implement the second phase of its water management program, which requires mandatory outside water use restrictions. During this phase outside usage is limited to watering by hand and permitted by the address of a customer's property in relation to the calendar date from 6 PM to 9PM. For example, 10 Anystreet could use water outside during the specified time period on any even numbered calendar day. No usage is allowed on the 31st day. The third phase of the program does not permit any outside water usage. The penalty for using water during a prohibited use period is $50 for termination and $50 to $165 to restore water service.

Aquarion recommends several ways to use water wisely outdoors and to help in the water conservation effort.

- Water your lawn and garden only when they need it.
- Don't follow a set watering schedule.

If the voluntary measures do not reduce demand, Aquarion will then implement the second phase of its water management program, which requires mandatory outside water use restrictions.

- Water grass and plants by hand only when they shows signs of wilting. An easy way to tell if your lawn requires water is to step on the grass and then step back. If the grass stays flat, then it needs to be watered. If the grass springs up, it still has plenty of moisture
- Deep soak your lawn and garden when you do water. Water by hand long enough for the moisture to soak down to the roots where it will do the most good. In this way, the lawn will develop a deeper root system which requires less watering and is more disease resistant.
- Water during the cooler parts of the day to avoid evaporation. Heat and wind will rob your lawn and garden of water before it can be used. Watering before 9 a.m., or after 6 p.m. helps to prevent evaporation. Automatic sprinkler systems should be set for manual operation. This prevents needless watering when it is raining or when there has been adequate rainfall. Be sure to direct all sprinklers so that water contact is with vegetation and not wasted on sidewalks, streets, or driveway.
- Hand held watering is strongly encouraged. Hand watering allows one to direct water to the specific area that needs water. Don't leave your garden hose unattended. More than 600 gallons of water can be wasted in only a few hours.
- Repair all leaks indoors and outside. A dripping faucet that leaks one drop per second wastes about 2,700 gallons per year.

Sunrise seniors have one thing in common.
They're all different.

At Sunrise, we celebrate all of our residents for the unique individuals they are. We believe no two people are alike, so the care and services we provide should never be exactly the same.

This approach helps seniors live the life they want to live, from beautifully appointed living spaces to personalized assistance and care. We call it resident-centered senior living, and it begins the day a senior walks into our community.

Visit or call Sunrise Assisted Living, and discover how we're different. In Cohasset, we offer Assisted Living and Alzheimer's Care.

Jack Bryant, one of the Tuskegee Airmen, honored at Statehouse

RIDING FOR A CAUSE

Hats off to the three young men from Cohasset: Will Prendergast, 21; Alex Schmidt, 21 and Dan Williams, 22, who road in the Pan-Mass Challenge which was held over the weekend.

The Pan-Mass challenge is a fundraiser for Dana-Farber and the Jimmy Fund in an effort to raise money for cancer research. It was the first ride for all three young men. Their ride took them from Sturbridge to Bourne on day one and from Bourne to the finish line in Wellesley on day two. All three finished and are anticipating that they will try it again next year.

Their families are understandably quite proud of their accomplishment.

THAYER HONORS

Let's hear it for the Cohasset students who achieved academic honors at Thayer Academy for the spring term.

Grade 12: Suzanne Marie Lewis. Honors for the term and Honors for the semester. Grade 11: Catherine M. Ernst. High Honors for the term and Honors for the semester and Joseph M. Rosano. Honors for the term and Honors for the semester.

Grade 10: Justin M. Harnett. Honors for the term and Honors for the semester and Sarah Bookstein. High Honors for the term and Honors for the semester.

Grade 9: Sarah D. Brown. Honors for the term and Honors for the semester.

Grade 8: Anna E. Blanken. Honors in achievement and High Honors in effort.

Grade 7: Lindsey E. Allard. Honors in effort.

Congratulations all!

JACK BRYANT HONORED

Jack Bryant of Cohasst was recently honored by the Boston Celtics during the organization's "Heroes Among Us" award ceremony at the Statehouse. The program in its eighth year saluted exceptional individuals like Jack, who was recognized for his role during the fight to protect America during WWII. Jack was one of the original Tuskegee Airmen, America's first black pilots, bombardiers, navigators and support personnel. Jack gallantly fought two wars, a battle against foreign aggression overseas, as well as the battle at home to integrate the armed forces.

Mollie Chipman, front row (far right), is pictured with students in Maria Wood's Fashion Focus program. Be sure to read more about the program in Around Town.

MINOT LIGHT ROUNDABOUT

Ever dream about rowing around Minot Light? We realize many of you have, but we'd be even more have not. Well here's your chance.

The Cohasset Maritime Institute invites all kinds of oar and paddle craft to its Minot's Light Roundabout – a race around the lighthouse on Aug. 21.

A 4-1/2 mile open water race, the course runs from just outside the Cohasset breakwater out to historic (and some say, haunted) Minot Ledge Light, around behind the light, over to the 1G lighted bell, and back to the breakwater.

Following the Roundabout, join CMI as rowers travel under Cohasset's Border Street Bridge and explore the Gulf River Estuary. Participants will spend about an hour on the Gulf and return before the height of tide drops too far to make the passage back out to Cohasset Harbor.

Everyone is invited!

For more ore information, contact Mike Dick. Email: Mike.Dick at rowcmi.org. Phone: 781-383-0204.

MEET WITH GARRETT

For years we referred to Mary Jeanette Murray, our long-time state representative extraordinare as simply "Mary Jeanette." We think our Rep. Garrett Bradley is achieving that status! With that being said, if you have any concerns or issues that Garrett can help with, he's conducting office hours Monday, Aug. 15 at the Sons of Italy Hall off Rte. 3A in Hingham, from 6 to 7 p.m. Visitors should enter his district office through the Route 3A side entrance of the building. If unable to attend scheduled office hours, you can call Garrett at: 617-722-2396 for an appointment.

SCAM ALERT!

There have been recent reports that subjects posing as employees of the water department have been contacting residents attempting to collect an upaid bill. These subjects typically target the senior citizen community. This is a type of scam and all residents should be aware of this activity. Residents who receive any suspicious call should hang up, dial *57, and report the incident to the Cohasset Police Department at 781-383-1212.

20-YEAR REUNION

For CHS Class of 1985 grads, their 20th class reunion is here. They'll be celebrating Saturday, Aug. 13, 7 p.m., at the Red Lion in Cohasset.

For more information on the event or to provide an address for the committee call Ingrid Drago, 781-585-8976, or email CohassetHigh1985@aol.com

We hope everyone has a wonderful time!

LIVE OWLS AT WOMPATUCK

Wompatuck State Park is holding a free demonstration of live owls by the Blue Hills Trailside Museum on Monday Aug. 15, 1 to 2 p.m. Visitors will meet the park interpreter at the Mason A. Foley Visitor Center, Union St., at the right of the park entrance.

Sponsored by the Dept. of Conservation and Recreation and the Massachusetts Audubon Society, the presentation will explore what makes owls unique hunters and how they fit into the New England ecosystem.

For more information call 781-749-7160.

GHOST STORIES NEEDED

Does anyone know any good ghost stories? The Cohasset Historical Society is planning its Fall Lecture Series. The theme for the October program is ghost stories of the South Shore. Anyone with knowledge of the spirits that haunt the area is asked to contact the Historical Society and share their stories. The programs are held on the third Wednesday of each month, Sept. through Nov. at 7:30 p.m. in the Pratt Building at 106 South Main St.

Contact the Society at 781-383-1434 for additional information and to volunteer your ghost stories.

DRESSED FOR SUCCESS

Students of Maria Wood's Fashion Focus, including Cohasset's Mollie Chipman, recently participated in a graduation fashion show titled "Dressed for Success." A portion of the proceeds from the show was donated to Tailored for Success, Inc., a non-profit agency dedicated to helping economically disadvantaged women secured and retain employment.

For more information, contact Maria Wood at 781-826-0241.

DOG TRAINING

The Recreation department will hold a five-week, beginner dog training course on Wednesday evenings from 6 to 7 p.m. starting Aug. 24. This will be the last session given until next season.

Good Manners for Beginners teaches the beginner level obedience commands such as sit, stay, come, down, take, drop, heel, don't touch, watch me, and other basics. Also covered are behavioral problems such as jumping, mouthing and chewing. Handouts on dog obedience and behavior training are given out at each class.

For more information call 781-878-4343 or 781-383-4109.

YOUTH DANCE

There will be a dance at the Garage on Friday, Aug. 19 from 7 to 10 p.m. Everyone in Grade 6 and Grade 8 is welcome. There will be a door charge of $5 per person.

Snacks and refreshments will be sold as well.

That is all the news for this week. Please send me all of your news and information by noon on Tuesdays.

The king, played by Dayna St. Peter, suggests to the queen (Gabrielle Rodman) that they should have a fair trial before beheading Alice (McCauley Braun) in "Alice in Wonderland."

Tweedle Dum (left) and Tweedle Dee (middle) played by Ryan Barrow and Thomson Jaffe clown around when Alice is lost in Wonderland.

The Cheshire cat (Betsy Crawford) flashes her toothy smile after running into Alice and leaving her confusing hints about magical mushrooms.

Alice (McCauley Braun) meets some unusual animals upon her arrival in Wonderland, including a dodo (Callie Pienpenbrink), duck (Madison Pratt) and cryphon (Blair Darrell). The Cohasset Dramatic Club production was held in cooperation with the recreation department.

The caterpillar (Grace Curry) tries to tell Alice one last thing before being overwhelmed by fatigue during the Cohasset Dramatic Club's production of "Alice in Wonderland," on stage at Town Hall last week.

Collars can raise cancer awareness

Brain tumor survivor starts new enterprise

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

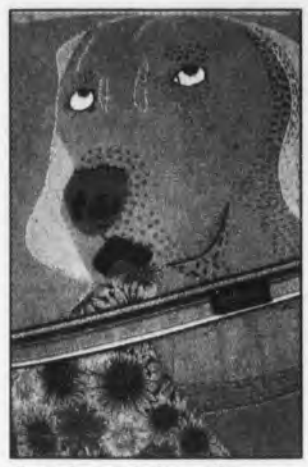
First artist, then children's book author and illustrator and now, entrepreneur.

And oh, by the way, Scott Leaver, 34, is also a cancer survivor.

In fact it was a malignant brain tumor that got Leaver started painting abstracts, many of which feature the family pet, Lucy — a lovable, big Swiss mountain dog — who inspired "LuLu," the star of Leaver's books and other endeavors.

Now on a personal leave-of-absence from his job in the computer software industry and in remission from his cancer, Leaver has created — under his new trademark Collars for a Cure — colorful, all-weather dog collars and matching leashes. Leaver, who lives in Hingham with his wife Sharyn, will donate a portion of the proceeds from their sale to benefit cancer research.

This is the latest chapter in Leaver's cancer fight that grew from his personal battle with the disease into a flood of creativity which has raised roughly $20,000 for cancer research and other charitable causes since January 2004.



The new collars, all made in the USA, feature the label Leaver created "Heal! good dog" and the address of his new web site: luluthedog.com. The collars come in multi-stripes with a varying pattern of colors. Each color represents cancer research organizations like the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation; Dana Farber/The Jimmy Fund; the Brain Tumor Society; and the Lance Armstrong Foundation.

The collars, which come in medium and large lengths for dogs weighing 30-130 pounds, sell for $28 and the leashes for $34. On his web site Leaver also offers a pink collar representing breast cancer organizations. Down the road Leaver hopes to create single-color collars for specific cancer organizations like the Susan G. Komen Foundation and he hopes to put a his trademark "Heal! good dog" logo on a green and purple collar representing the Brain Tumor Society.

Leaver explains while the stripes represent the colors of various cancer organizations, Collars for a Cure is not limited to those in terms of giving.

"I developed it to create more awareness of the organizations out there," he says. "Eventually I could do a collar with a different rainbow."

Ten percent of the proceeds of the multi-striped collars sold at retailers will go to a cancer charity of the month, selected by Leaver. Customers who purchase collars on-line can indicate one of 13 cancer charities they'd like the money donated to. All collars are hand-stitched and made of weather-proof nylon and grosgrain.

Scott Leaver's dog collars are the latest fashion rage and look quite stylish on this pillow at ZuZu's Sisters in Hingham Square.

Leaver, who is also a new father – Margaret Claire "Maggie" was born two months early on April 14 – is dividing his time between his charitable endeavors and making the trek to Children's Hospital to visit his daughter, who weighed only 2.2 lbs. at birth. Maggie is doing well and is expected to be able to come home in a couple of weeks.

Back in the summer of 2003, Leaver was diagnosed with a brain tumor. At 6-feet, 6-inches tall and an athlete who had always enjoyed good health, he brushed off the headaches he treated with aspirin until an August flight to Atlanta for his job that caused him to feel dizzy and lightheaded. He ended up in the hospital there where surgeons took out the tumor the size of a child's fist.

Ironically his wife Sharyn bought Leaver an easel for Christmas about two years earlier in the hope that he would take up painting. After his surgery and with no formal training, Leaver took out any of the frustration he had with his illness on the canvas. That's when the character, LuLu – featured in fun-loving, abstract paintings of his dog Lucy – came to life.

Leaver has found LuLu is a positive way to create awareness and raise money for a good cause.

"LuLu puts a whimsical face on a very serious topic," he says. Leaver believes – that like Newman's Own (Paul Newman's food company whose profits after taxes go to charities) — dog-lovers will purchase collars that also help heal.

Leaver points out that Lucy has helped him heal but knowing the cancer could return, he is wasting no time in launching his latest endeavor. He's excited that several local shops have offered to carry the collars (see box) as well as George, the San Francisco-based, high-end dog store.

Collars for a Cure popped into Leaver's head while traveling to Children's Hospital.

Scott Leaver and his dog Lucy sit outside ZuZu's Sisters in Hingham Square. Lucy, who is the inspiration for LuLu, is sporting a new collar and leash that Leaver developed through his new trademark Collars for a Cure.

Collars can raise cancer awareness

FROM COLLARS, PAGE 8

"I thought 'why can't we make fun designer collars to help cancer organizations – why not get all the organizations together in one place. It would look cool and raise money and awareness, too,'" he recalls.

Tricia Russ, who is co-owner of ZuZu's Sisters with Robin Aborn, said they are excited about carrying the collars and leashes.

"When Scott approached us about selling them in the store, we were thrilled," Russ says. "We'd heard his story and had seen his artwork at Brewed Awakenings."

ZuZu Sisters is also selling a new line of Heal! good dog LuLu T-shirts.

"We welcome any chance to build cancer awareness. And as big dog lovers, we love LuLu as well," Russ says.

Leaver recently launched luluthedog.com whose sister site is empoweredart.com where he sells his abstract paintings and lithographs, along with work by other artists, who have all agreed to donate a percentage of their sales to cancer.

He also illustrated and penned "LuLu and the Floppy Hat," the first in a series of children's books that also benefit cancer research. Leaver has finished his second book, "LuLu the Dog Meets Sweet Pickles and the Pirate Pug," and is currently illustrating it.

Leaver, who sees LuLu as the new-age Snoopy, says luluthedog.com also sells T-shirts, mugs and original LuLu paintings which the customer can "customize" with objects or colors that the customers chooses. For example, if a little boy likes fire engines, Leaver can paint LuLu with a fire engine on her head. Customers can also order paintings of their own dogs.

The San Diego native thinks the collars will be popular.

"Pets help you heal in a way that no other thing can," he says. Today with the popular, different-colored bracelets, lots of people are wearing their philanthropy on their wrists.

"Now they can put it on their dog, too," Leaver says.

EDITORIAL

The end of World War II

August 14, 1945.

Church bells rang throughout the day.

Factory whistles shrilled in the air.

A wave of exuberance carried thousands into the streets.

The surrender of Japan, nine days after the first of two atomic bomb attacks, ended World War II.

Today we look back at the war that shattered the world, left millions dead, and ushered in the nuclear age.

No one knows exactly how many people died in the war that began with Germany's invasion of Poland in 1939. Some place the estimate at around 34 million, about half of that number civilian deaths.

How can meaning be found in the deaths of tens of millions of people?

For democratic nations, the Axis powers threatened the right for people to be free, threatened the survival of democracy itself.

It's always through the stories of individual people that the horrors and hardships endured by countless persons take on meaning.

The war was won by the heroism and the sacrifices of individual people, whose fragile lives linked together to forge a steel chain that could not be broken by the evils that arose around them- stated as "fascism in Italy, Nazism in Germany, militarism in Japan" by historian Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

In spite of all we went through during those terrible years, Americans still called up a sense of humor as a source of strength.

The legendary humorist Spike Jones, in a satiric song about Hitler, urged us to "howl right in the fuehrer's face," while howling and waving the tail of his coonskin cap in a circle.

There was also a spot on television, where a series of people who probably faced as great a workload as any TV viewer, sang about their situation and ended with a hearty laugh and the phrase, "I'm laughing, why can't you?" One woman, using a scrub board to do her laundry, was the mother of six, and another singer was an out-straight shipyard worker.

The war began for America on Dec. 7, 1941, when Japan bombed Pearl Harbor, and ended on Aug. 14, 1945, eight days after the Enola Gay dropped the first of two atomic bombs on Japan. The first A-bomb struck Hiroshima on Aug. 6, the second struck Nagasaki on Aug. 9, with the loss of lives in those two cities ultimately totaling approximately 214,000.

This first atomic bomb attack in history was the end result of a race with Nazi labs working feverishly to be the first to create and use these weapons.

The probably inevitable advent of nuclear weapons, that shortened World War II and surely saved untold Allied lives, has now become perhaps the greatest threat to the world.

In "Witness to the Century: The glorious and the damned," published in the AARP Bulletin on Dec. 14, 1999, Schlesinger wrote, "Never before did nations locked in mortal rivalry possess the technical capacity to destroy the earth… No problem is more urgent at the millennium than the need to stop the testing and proliferation of nuclear weapons."

We look back today at the glorious victory over the enemies of democracy 60 years ago.

Years of uncertainty and hardship were over.

Stories ended that day.

The story of a cataclysmic war that raged and destroyed millions of lives, that left no part of the earth untouched.

For those whose hearts rejoiced that their Johnny - their son, their brother, their dad - was going to come marching home again, the story ended in joy.

For those whose hearts broke with loss, their story placed them among "all the unfulfilled of the war," as one contemporary author phrased it.

As we look back to a war won, we look ahead to the new threats to our way of life.

Prime Minister Tony Blair, in the aftermath of the July 7 bombings in London, said that the lack of democracy in the world is one of the roots of the terrorism we now battle.

The story of mankind's struggle for freedom and democracy continues, facing up to the claws of terrorism and a nuclear threat to the world's survival.

We look back to the sacrifice of lives and mourn the losses that lie ahead, but knowing that no life sacrificed is truly lost.

Life is not a finite line, that ended in a death camp, on the battlefield, or in the ashes of Hiroshima, but an infinite journey through the stream of time, made up of dips in and out of life.

Don't mind us! We're the Harbor Study Committee.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Widest range of affordability

TO THE EDITOR:

After watching the presentations at the recent selectman's meeting, I have made several observations.

First, the proposal with the widest range of affordability is the Deer Hill Partner's, LLC proposal as follows:

- 14 Affordable units at an average of $150,000 each.
- 17 Market rate "Moderate Income" one and two bedroom units at an average of $420,000 each.
- 25 free-standing "cottage style" condos at an average price of $705,000 each.

When I add the "affordable" and the "moderate" priced units together for each proposal, I get the following:

- Deer Hill, LLC, 14+17=31
- Cohasset Associates, 20 + 0= 20
- Northland, 16 + 0= 16

By my calculations, Deer Hill, LLC has managed to combine the most open space and the most number of "affordable" and "moderate" units of all proposals.

Not a cheerleader for Avalon

TO THE EDITOR:

I'm writing to correct an impression which I seem to have given in my last Health Notes that I may be a "Cheerleader for Avalon" as one of my of email respondents claims. I am not! However, while I recognize that some of the objectives of Avalon may conceivably provide benefit, the preponderance of fallout from Avalon would be detrimental to the Town.

Having said that, history reminds us that powerful, experienced, well connected, and rich interests generally prevail over small, poorly funded disorganized defensive efforts. Now, it may well be that behind the scenes, there is a skillful focused and effective defensive effort going on, but there appears to be little evidence.

My article in Health Notes was intended to be a reminder that in spite of other town concerns, if Avalon is to be dealt with so that it doesn't create great harm, we'd better get our act together. The article merely indicated that Avalon's posture with respect to environmental issues appears to be reasonable. As has been pointed out to me, others, perhaps with better information, have different views.

At minimum, we should be thinking about who should be running the defense and how. Perhaps we should have a cadre of clever, experienced volunteer negotiators which would be available to cope with the infinity of issues which arise during negotiations between Town and Town supplicants.

Objects to inane subject

TO THE EDITOR:

I read, with much bewilderment, a letter concerning "ugly hedges" in the Aug. 5, 2005 edition of the Cohasset Mariner. The enormity of the inanity is apparent when one considers the critical local, state, national, and international issues that require our attention.

Cook Estate wastewater

TO THE EDITOR:

The Staszko proposal gives the town one clear advantage over the other two, which must be weighed against the other pros and cons of each.

There is no absolute guarantee that the site can handle the wastewater from 65 units, or even 50, and a strong probability that it cannot, especially over the long term. If that proves true in the short term, either of the other two contractors (and the town) are in trouble. If in the long term, the unit owners and the town have a difficult problem. However, Staszko can use his adjacent property to obviate the discrepancy.

There is nothing "unfair" about Staszko having the advantage of happening to own adjacent property which can be utilized to the advantage of the town and of the future unit owners. It would be equally inappropriate to suggest that a bidder has an "unfair" advantage because he has the more experience than the others.

The important criterion is what is best for the town for the long run, considering all factors.

Beechwood St. rail crossing work to start

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Cohasset is about to experience the first "in your face" construction on the Greenbush project. Up to this point as residents drive down any of the connector roads from the village to Route 3A or to Route 228, the railroad clearing is very evident. We have received a large number of comments about the amazing size of the open swath that is progressing through Town. Although the work is very visible, it has not been a general inconvenience, other than to the abutters. It did not interfere with the flow of traffic.

Starting as early as August 15th, that is about to change. The MBTA is planning to start work on the construction of the Beechwood railroad crossing. What are the impacts? Well, like any construction, those who are closest will clearly hear the heavy equipment that will be used in the construction process. But in addition, according to the MBTA's schedule, the area near the Beechwood Street crossing will be closed to all traffic for a nominal period of four weeks.

Anyone who normally travels Beechwood Street between South Main Street and Route 3A will need to seek an alternate route during the closure. Traffic that ordinarily travels Beechwood Street will be able to use North Scituate or Pond Street as alternate routes. Access will be maintained to the Beechwood Street properties in the vicinity of the railroad crossing, but, depending on which side of the crossing a person lives, access must be from either Route 3A or South Main Street.

Anyone who normally travels Beechwood Street between South Main Street and Route 3A will need to seek an alternate route during the closure.

We are working with the Town's emergency forces to make plans for these traffic changes and have contacted the schools so that they can make the appropriate changes to their bus routes and schedules when school restarts in September.

After the MBTA completes construction of the Beechwood crossing, it is scheduled to move on to construct the Spring / Pond Street crossing. This will be a major piece of construction because a lot of the ledge at the end of Pond Street will be removed to make way for the reconfigured intersection and railroad crossing. The current schedule shows Spring / Pond Street construction starting on or about Sept. 12 for a period of four weeks, during which all of these roads will be closed or have traffic restricted at the construction site. We suspect that Pond / Spring crossing may take a bit longer than the currently scheduled four weeks. Unlike Beechwood Street, there will be detours set up nearby to drive around the construction.

Since, the construction at crossings is even more accessible than the clearing, safety becomes even more important, especially with children. During construction hours and certainly afterward, these are not good places to be.

NCAA nixes the I-word

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The next time the University of Illinois makes the NCAA basketball tournament, there's someone they're going to have to leave behind.

It's the mascot, a Native American known as "Illini."

I'm sure that members of the team would dearly love to have Illini on the sidelines cheering them on but the NCAA, caught up in the excitement of a PC moment, has banned from its tournaments the use of "hostile" and "abusive" nicknames and mascots.

Even if it's the name of the state which writes the checks for the school.

"We believe hostile or abusive nicknames are troubling to us and it can't continue," said Walter Harrison, chairman of the NCAA committee that produced the ban. "We're trying to send a message saying that these mascots are not appropriate for NCAA championships."

(I believe it's called the Committee for Diversity and Inclusion, but don't hold me to it.)

I don't detect much hostility or abusiveness in the word "Indian," but the nation's institutions of higher learning seem to have been swept clean of what is becoming known aficionados of Old English as the I-word to go along with the N-word and the F-word.

Apparently, not even written permission from the Seminole Tribe of Florida can save the Florida State Seminoles from the wrath of the NCAA...

The Associated Press took a survey the other day and found that there were only seven NCAA schools left in the whole country that used the nickname "Indians," of which I had heard of just one, Catawba, and that was only because I got a flat tire one day in Salisbury, N.C.

The only "abusive" college nickname I have personal knowledge of is the Fighting Sioux of the University of North Dakota and that abuse that was hung on the offending words by the Native Americans themselves.

"Sioux," I was told on more or less good authority, was the word for "enemy" in the language of one of the many tribes that fought them for their hunting grounds. Those "Sioux" called themselves "Lakota." But I digress . . . .

Apparently, not even written permission from the Seminole Tribe of Florida can save the Florida State Seminoles from the wrath of the NCAA, even though, I'm told, the tribe has a stake in the income from the sale of war bonnets and such from the college gift shop.

The NCAA also has a thing about teams from Southeastern Oklahoma State University calling themselves the "Savages," which certainly sounds hostile until you realize that that's probably what Caesar's Romans called the Gauls. The word goes back at least that far.

Actually the only real insulting team nickname I ever heard was dropped 15 years ago and it had nothing to do with Indians or Native Americans. That was when the athletes at Wahpeton High School in North Dakota were known as "the Wops." They're the Huskies now.

No ethnic slur was intended. "Wops" is a logical reduction of the name of the town itself, Wahpeton, which is an Indian word meaning . . . aw, let's not press our luck.

HEALTH NOTES

List-makers, list-keepers are critical in an emergency

By Steve Bobo

After every quarterly meeting of the Emergency Management Planning Committee, the Board writes a Health Notes to tell people how everything is getting on. Most people's eyes glaze over and they move to Jim Hamilton's cartoon or elsewhere, although since the London bombings, attendance at the meeting has risen dramatically.

Every meeting's agenda has a line item about public outreach. Some of us on the committee assumed that everyone would just read Health Notes and become excited about the Aaron River Dam bursting or a visitor from Thailand arriving in Cohasset and giving everyone Avian Flu. And then again, some of us have started to look at the way things really work. You can bet that for those on the recent Air France Airbus 340 at Toronto, emergency management became a big issue. It seems we think about it a few seconds after we really need it. So what's to be done?

List-makers — Well, the first thing people say when there's a crisis is that there were a few heroes who saved the day. So, we need a list of heroes. Those identified as heroes always say well, I was just there and it had to be done. So the list of heroes is generally just average people. What we need are list-makers and keepers. In every enterprise we have phone chains, call trees; etc.....those who are willing to make calls and ask for volunteers. So, one of the first requirements of an emergency preparedness program is to find out who to call and who will call. At the Board of Health, we have Merle Graham who rounds up the volunteers for the Health Fair. She does much more, but if that were all she did, she would still deserve a medal. There are list-keepers in every organization.

Volunteers — Lists in the emergency preparedness business are massive. There are lists of people; people who take the place of paid workers while they are dealing with an emergency, people who have specialized skills; people who forward information and calls; as well as find people who can answer the questions being asked. Generally, these people have lists of answers like the Frequently Asked Questions (FAQ's) referred to on the Web. They're volunteers and they like to do it. Then, there are those who may have all the qualifications, but don't have the certificate. In an emergency situation, the need for specialized skills for hundreds of jobs is spread very thin.

One of the first requirements of an emergency preparedness program is to find out who to call and who will call.

Communication — Communication demands lists of people with unique skills: Ham radio operators. Wireless or cell phone experts. Radiotelephone people SSB, VHS, etc. Networks in all of these technologies exist, and in the future, if there are not some already there will be email sites blogs, and certainly listings of helpful web-pages If a call goes out for specialized categories of skills and you have them, you need to respond.

Stockpiles and Supplies — Where do we get it if we don't have it? Sheets blankets, cots, clean water; anything likely to be needed in an emergency. Someone has to coordinate the various lists of supplies and skills and equipment needed in an emergency. The pitifully small list of supplies stockpiled will never do the job. Where will blankets, cots, water, dishes, who knows what else be when needed. And who will have a list of people who can provide needed supplies?

The Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) and its Massachusetts counterpart MEMA are responsible for funding and organizing the distribution of supplies, information, training and a host of other necessities. These organizations come in for much criticism about being politicized. Don't necessarily believe everything you hear about emergency management politics. Most with responsibility in such matters have the opinion that the centralized plans about the allocations of stockpiles and assignment of training and a number of other important issues follow a pattern which makes considerable sense. It would be difficult to understand such a distribution of resources let alone criticize without knowing something about the entire national program plan.

But for us in Cohasset, there are emergency response jobs for volunteers. These are jobs we don't think about all the time. But in a crisis or during an emergency, everybody should remember to call someone whose business it is to provide the answers.

Key to all of these volunteers are the list-makers and keepers who know who to call. Perhaps you can fill one of these important temporary volunteer posts.

If you can and feel that you should be on a list, to volunteer, call Arthur Lehr 383-0388, Glenn Pratt 781 356 4400, or anyone in the Board of Health – 781 383-4116 In an emergency, call 911; the Police- 781 383-1212, or the Fire Department - 781 383-0260.

With a little help, baby birds take off

ON THE WILD SIDE

JUNE FREEDMAN

Mother's and Father's Days have come and gone, but I am still growing in appreciation for one kind of parent — the avian. Since May and June, birds have been most busy hatching, feeding and teaching their young. The New England Wildlife Center is also most busy taking care of the injured and orphaned birds brought to them by their concerned human species neighbors.

I cannot begin to tell you how satisfying it is to care for these babies and see them grow.

Baby birds at the wildlife center quickly learn to beg by cheeping and showing their gape.

Callers and visitors to the Center bringing in babies for care are quizzed at some length about the circumstances in which they are found. Baby birds quickly move through three stages of development: hatchlings, from immediately after emerging from the shell until feathers appear; nestlings, from feathering until ready to leave the nest; and fledglings, ready to learn to fly and forage for themselves. Fledglings found on the ground should usually be left alone, and if possible protected from predators, since the teaching parent is usually somewhere nearby.

Only in two respects do bird parents have it easier. First of all, baby birds do sleep through the night, unlike their human counterparts! Secondly, they often move through the three stages to independence in 6 to 8 weeks! Then they're off — if not to college at least to being self-supporting and starting their own families! But no wonder, since they are fed from dawn to dusk about every 15 to 20 minutes!

Once accepted for care at the Center, staff, interns and volunteers continue this feeding schedule. (I am a subscriber to the "it could always be worse" philosophy: baby squirrels have to be fed round the clock!) It is most important to determine the species of bird, no matter how tiny, so that they will be given the right formula for nourishment, insectivore or omnivore. The babies are fed with small syringes, and for the most part quickly learn to beg by cheeping and showing their gape. We have all seen the familiar picture of babies in the nest with their mouths wide open. It is important to release the syringe far enough back into the throat. Most babies will stop begging when they are full, but the caregiver can also check the crop, a swelling on the side of their throat, where they store food, to see if it is full.

Then there is the matter of keeping their environment clean. Baby birds tend to void soon after eating, so one quickly learns to change their nesting materials (both cloth and paper toweling) a while after their feeding. The good news is that birds from birth have an instinctual urge to keep their nest clean. Even baby birds will try to go over the edge! No need for advice, books and gadgets to help in toilet training!

I cannot begin to tell you how satisfying it is to care for these babies and see them grow. From their improvised nests of toweling they are moved to small cages, and later to large flight cages where they can exercise their new flying talents. Some birds, such as starlings and sparrows, can be quite frustrating to continue to feed in the flight cages. They will rush from one end of the cage to the other when the caregiver approaches, syringe in hand. Fortunately, at this stage they are also eating from seed trays placed in the cages. Other species, such as robins and mockingbirds, continue to line up and beg for food.

Eventually, about 70 per cent of the birds raised at the center reach the point where they can be released back to nature. Occasionally I have been dive-bombed walking from one building to another, formula and syringe in hand, by a recently released bird back looking for an easy meal! Most, however, learn that Mother Nature's diverse feast far surpasses our "fast food," and they never look back.

I am a bit of a dilettante when it comes to bird watching. I don't keep a life list or even a checklist after field trips. I have great difficulty remembering the names of species when I or someone else identifies them. I prefer to think of myself as a "holistic bird watcher," enjoying the fields and woods and seashore, the warm sun, the birds' bright colors, birdsong, and their interesting behaviors and interactions with each other. Feeding the baby birds is a great way to see their colors and feathering up close, hear their calls repeatedly, and learn some of their distinctive behaviors.

There is a more profound lesson to be learned from bird parents as well. If you do the best you can to nurture, teach and feed your young, for the most part they will fly high and stay safe, whether off to college or other parts unknown. "Empty-nesters-to-be," rest assured!

Wristband to help find wanderers

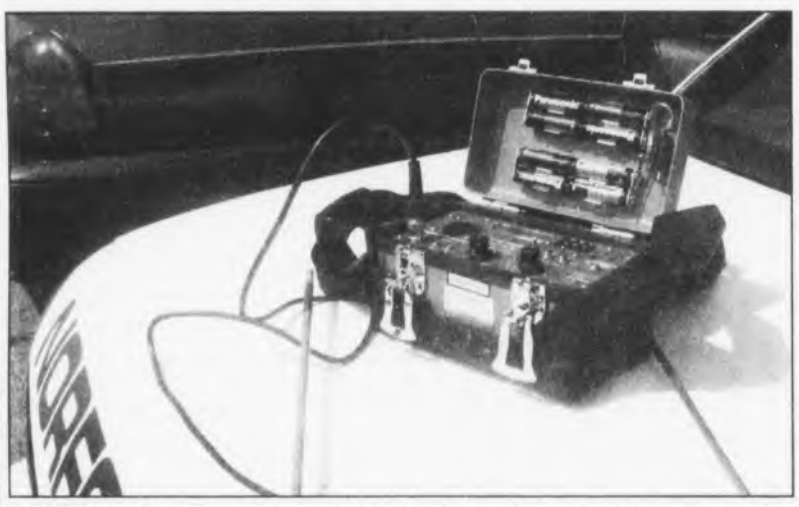
"We thought paying for the transmitter was the best way to get Cohasset started in the program."

Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti said collectively, the bank, police and sheriff's office have added another level of security for seniors with Alzheimer's and some children with special needs.

The sheriff's office has donated two wrist bands to each town in the county. The bands cost $300 each; the batteries that are replaced monthly cost $25. Knight said the sheriff's office will work with volunteers from the Council on Elder Affairs to train them on how to change the batteries.

He said there are roughly 15 people in the county who are using the bracelets. "We haven't had to go out for anyone yet," Knight said. He said there have been 1,165 saves nationally with the program.

Bellotti is the statewide coordinator for the program and hopes to bring it to every county in Massachusetts. Once Quincy is onboard, every community in Norfolk County will have adopted Project Lifesaver.



Knight said it will take roughly six weeks to have the program up and running in Cohasset.

He explained not only could Project Lifesaver save lives, it is also very cost effective. Knight said a search without the transmitter can cost $1,500 an hour.

"It's another tool in the toolbox for police and sheriff's department," Knight said. "But it can also give families tremendous peace of mind to know that this technology exists if their loved one wanders off that we can find the person in a relatively short period of time."

Hussey said the sheriff's office has donated two bracelets to Cohasset. He will ask the Council on Elder Affairs to help identify participants for the program.

"If families can afford to purchase their own, that would be great," Hussey said. "But we will work to raise funds for anyone who would benefit from a bracelet."

A $3,100 grant from Pilgrim Cooperative Bank will be used to purchase the mobile tracking unit shown here on top of a Norfolk County Sheriff Department cruiser. The unit is light enough to be held or worn around the neck with a strap. It also has an antenna and can pick up the frequency emitted from the wristband.

How Project Lifesaver works:

Project Lifesaver relies on pulse-carrier wave radio-frequency technology, complemented by a search-and-rescue team that has received specialized training. People who use the services of the Project Lifesaver program wear a personalized wristband that emits a constant tracking signal. When caregivers notify the local Project Lifesaver agency that a person is missing, a search-and-rescue team responds to the wanderer's area and starts searching with the mobile locator tracking system.

Alzheimer's numbers:

- 4 million people in the US have Alzheimer's
- An estimated 15,235 people in Norfolk County have Alzheimer's
- An estimated 167 people in Cohasset have the disease
- More than 50 percent of these people wander and become lost
- Nearly half will die f not located within 24 hours

Police Chief Hussey signs three year contract with town

the department interacts with the community. He said barriers have been broken down and members of the department are building good relationships with members of the community during non-crisis situations. Hussey said it is much easier to work with someone during a crisis when there's already a foundation on a more friendly level.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said he has been very pleased with Hussey's work over the past year, and was glad he decided to stay on board.

"The Police Department has come through a very difficult period of time, and Chief Hussey has made huge strides in building a sense of teamwork within the police department, and to reconnect the department to the community of Cohasset," he said. "While a lot of work still needs to be done, it is vitally important that the positive momentum being experienced continues through Chief Hussey's leadership."

During the past year, Hussey's salary was set at $101,000. With the new contract, as of July 1, Hussey's salary was increased to $109,000 per year. Beginning July 1, 2006, his salary will be increased by 2.5 percent, for a total of $111,725, and beginning July 1, 2007, his salary will be increased by another 3 percent, for a total of $115,076. Jackson's salary was $84,000 per year.

"Both the chief and I collected information on the salaries of other police chiefs and agreed that the contract terms were fair and consistent with the market," Griffin said.

Hussey agreed and said it was a very easy negotiations process. "It only took one time of sitting down to hammer out what needed to be done," he said.

Hussey comes to Cohasset with 28 years of policing under his belt. He had previously been a member of the Boston Police Department. Hussey held many roles in Boston, including serving as acting commissioner for three months during an interim period, directing the Boston Police Academy, teaching civil rights to immigrants, and instructing self-defense courses. He is also a certified mediator.

"People always say to me it must be an adjustment," coming to a small town from the city, but Hussey said it has been great for him to be able to get back "to where the rubber meets the road" and deal with issues firsthand rather than through layers of personnel.

"I am directly involved with and work with people on various issues," he said, adding there are many quality of life issues to be addressed in Cohasset, including traffic issues. He said he looks forward to working with the police department and other town entities to come up with solutions.

In Cohasset, Hussey's contract states he is required to work a minimum of 40 hours per week, with a typical work week being five out of every seven days. However, the contract specifies he should also be on call for emergencies at all times except during vacation, sick, or disability leave periods, and any other excused absences.

Annually, Hussey is able to take five weeks paid vacation, and is also entitled to two days off for paid personal leave. He may also take paid sick leave and bereavement leave.

As chief, Hussey has access to a fully equipped police vehicle for his exclusive use. The town will also provide Hussey with a cell phone and beeper at the town's expense for the purpose of communication, particularly while "on call" and during emergencies.

In terms of professional development, Hussey will be allowed to attend the International Association of Chiefs of Police annual conference and Civil Rights Committee meetings each year without loss of vacation or other leave, and will be reimbursed by the town for all expenses incurred while attending or traveling to the conference. In addition, over the term of his contract, Hussey will receive a $4,000 educational incentive in recognition of his master's degree in law enforcement.

Beechwood St. detour coming

Gruber pointed out the Beechwood Street closing is really the first time Cohasset residents have been inconvenienced by the train in terms of traffic.

"It's really hit us now," he said, adding the fire and police departments will have to adjust their routes as will the school buses.

Following the Beechwood Street crossing work, construction will begin on the intersection of Spring and Pond streets. Brennan said the two projects will not overlap, as there will be road closures for the Pond/Spring intersection as well.

Other issues the two liaisons will continue working on are the Pleasant Street crossing, which will be "hugely important for the town, as it ties into the downtown revitalization and parking lot," said Gruber. He added he hopes they will receive a redesign of the crossing at some point next week for review.

Unfortunately, plans to keep a portion of the old railroad turntable uncovered permanently as a historical feature were denied. Gruber said he was told it was "outside the scope of the project." However, he said they are not done with that fight yet and will be regrouping and giving it another try.

Brennan said the former Graham Waste building where the new Greenbush station will be located is slated to be razed very soon. He said with the help of Town Manager Bill Griffin, Cohasset has asked for Mass Highway to reconsider installing a traffic light at the station.

"We really need that light," said Brennan, as there has been a bike path proposed just across the street that would lead all the way to Wompatuck Park, and potentially sidewalks stretching from Rte. 3A up King Street to encourage residents to leave their cars at home. A light would greatly help ensure pedestrian safety, he said.

"Let's face it, the Greenbush line is all about decreasing traffic," Brennan said.

Brennan and Gruber pointed out again, it is extremely important for parents to remind their children the right of way is not safe for playing. Gruber said they have begun a safety initiative with the schools to warn children about the dangers of the train even before it arrives.

"None of the other five towns have done it," Gruber said, adding Cohasset was the first to tackle safety issues during construction. Gruber said Tom Carroll, outreach coordinator for Cashman Balfour Beatty, the company constructing the Greenbush line, asked him for copies of the letter they had sent out to Cohasset parents and students. He said he wanted to offer it to other towns.

Gruber said it is vital that parents tell their children the tracks are no longer safe, even just to walk across.

"Old habits are hard to break," he said, adding safety concepts really need to be reinforced.

"The town is a little bit different than the way it was a few months ago," he said.

Zeroing in on the health of the harbor

New committee meets on Aug. 16

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Having a healthy harbor is of utmost importance to the town. To that end, selectmen have appointed a harbor health committee to study the various changes that have been taking place and find remedies to the problems.

The harbor health committee will have an open meeting Tuesday, Aug. 16 to discuss the factors impacting the harbor's health, and hear some of the data collected by students through the Center for Student Coastal Research. The meeting will begin at 7 p.m. at the CSCR, located in Mariner's Park at the end of Parker Avenue. All are welcome to attend.

Harbor health committee chairman Jim Drysdale said during the meeting, all student data collected since the opening of the CSCR will be presented, and information on bacteria levels, salinity, dissolved oxygen, nitrates, and the health of the grasses and fish will be discussed.

The harbor health committee is still in its early stages, and will therefore also discuss its charter during the meeting.

The selectmen have given the committee eight weeks to conduct research and report back to the board. If the timeframe is not adequate, an extension will be given. Research will be conducted only on Cohasset Harbor, which selectman Gary Vanderweil said can be defined as the area bounded by the breakwater, the Mill Bridge, and the tide gates.

Vanderweil, who suggested selectmen set the health of the harbor as a long-term goal, said there have been drastic changes in the harbor's water as mudflasks are disappearing, sea grass is dying, and galvanized hardware has a much shorter life span when exposed to the harbor's water. Hopefully, the work of the committee will help solve the issues, he said.

The harbor health committee is made up of Russ Bonetti, 20 Parker Ave.; Noel Collins, 15 Forest Ave.; Jim Drysdale, 4 Cedar Acres Lane; Paul Figueiredo, 173 Pond St.; Willy Fox, 35 Stockbridge St.; Paul Pattison, 104 Elm St.; Karen Quigley, 27 Clay Spring Road; Peter Wood, 77 Summer St.; and Peter Wookman, 43 Beechwood St.

Town health insurance coverage interesting topic

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Health insurance coverage is often one of the more important benefits employees receive. Perhaps that is why Town Manager Bill Griffin has been receiving many questions both from the selectmen and advisory committee regarding Cohasset town employee coverage.

Recently, selectman Gary Vanderweil broached the subject at a board meeting when he asked whether the town offers health insurance to elected officials. Since then, members of the advisory committee have come to him with questions as well. In light of the inquiries, Griffin prepared a memo outlining the plans offered by the town, the number of employees and retirees in each plan, and the cost of the plans to both the employees and the town.

While town employees must work 20 hours per week to be eligible for health insurance, elected officials — who may only have one meeting per week or year — can qualify, provided they receive compensation for their time.

In addition, if an elected official serves more than 10 years on a board, he or she can become part of the Norfolk County Retirement System, which makes them eligible to receive health insurance for life.

Director of Finance Michael Buckley said the only elected officials who are paid a "salary" and do not work set hours are the five selectmen, the three assessors, the town moderator, and the registrars. Each selectman receives $1,000 per year, with the chairman receiving $1,500. The chairman of the board of assessors receives $1,300 per year, while members receive $1,200. Registrars receive $329 per year, and the moderator is paid $1.

St. Stephen's improvements are slated

Construction of a new handicap accessible elevator and a new memorial garden will begin at St. Stephen's Church Aug. 15.

Representative for the church Wallace St. John came before selectmen Tuesday to ask for permission to install a temporary fence around a portion of the church on town property while construction is taking place. He said because the garden will be surrounded by a retaining wall, for safety reasons there should be a fenced off area which will be used to hold the rocks for the wall.

St. John said the fence will only be temporary and construction should be complete within 90 days. He said the land where the rocks will be piled, will be restored to its original state once the job is complete.

Selectman Rob Spofford asked whether the proper insurance will be in place, just in case anything ever happened on the town's portion of the fenced off property, and St. John said it would.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer asked whether the construction will interfere with the construction of the Village Revitalization project. He said from the church's plans, it looked as if the fencing might interfere with the sidewalk repairs slated for the portion of South Main Street near the intersection with Depot Court.

St. John said the fencing can always be pulled in to allow construction to be unobstructed, and the church is more than willing to work with the town.

"The church has been anxious for some time to get that started."

St. John said of the streetscape improvements below St. Stephen's, and will cooperate to ensure it gets done.

Cedarmere construction

Tree clearing has been taking place at the future site of Cedarmere - formerly known as the Hayes Estate off Beechwood Street. As the site begins to take shape, minor changes are being made to plans regarding drainage to ensure the plans adequately reflect what the topography of the land allows.

To keep abutters informed of the happenings on the site, monthly meetings will be held. Anyone with questions or concerns is encouraged to call (781) 358-4030, which is the temporary sale center on site. This number may change when the new general contractor comes on site, and the Cedarmere development team will provide the new number in outreach materials in the future.

Smith Place plans get go-ahead

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Despite objections from abutters, Richard Brown has been given permission to build a new 9,000 square-foot structure on Smith Place.

Armed with a redesign of the building intended to make it more "harmonious" with the neighborhood, Brown came before the planning board Wednesday and was given permission by a 2-1 vote.

While chairman Al Moore and member Mike Westcott felt the plans were appropriate for the site, member Stuart Ivimey agreed with abutters and said the building does not fit in with its surroundings, and will be a detriment to the neighborhood.

"Clearly the design has come a long way over last time, but I still don't believe it's harmonious. We need to think more about the residents and we should be far more concerned with it's impact," said Ivimey. "I don't think it is in keeping with Cohasset, and I think there will be a significant detriment to the neighborhood."

Brown's original plans were to raze the existing building at 2 Smith Place and replace it with a new, steel building with eight bays. That building would have essentially been a large rectangular structure with a garage door and a single entrance door on each bay.

"It would have looked like storage," said Brown's architect Herb Kuendig.

However, plans presented this week, while drawn to cover the same footprint as the original building, were designed to look more like an old train station, which Kuendig said is appropriate due to the building's proximity to the train tracks. The new building will be made of wood, not steel, and will have clapboards, a pitched roof and cupolas.

The new building will be made of wood, not steel, and will have clapboards, a pitched roof and cupolas.

In addition, engineer Brian Taylor of Stenbeck and Taylor, Inc., said there has been a buffer of trees planned to help screen the building from neighbors. He said there will be white pines planted every 10 feet around the side of the property closest to the residential area, for a total of roughly 35 trees.

"White pines are indigenous and a drought tolerant. They stay green all year," he said.

Taylor said the trees will be roughly eight feet tall when planted and will grow to roughly 20 feet.

But the improvements weren't enough for some abutters who felt having a business located so close to a residential area is going to have a very negative impact. The entrance to Smith Lane from Ripley Road is going to close when the Greenbush line comes through, making it necessary to travel down Pleasant Street and Cushing Street — through a residential area — to access the building, which they believe will greatly increase traffic.

Elsa Miller, 60 Reservior Road, said it was her understanding the building was located partially in a commercial zone, but partially in a residential zone, and wondered if that would affect plans.

Members of the board said roughly two-thirds of the building is located in the commercial zone, and the other one-third is encroaching on the residential zone. Moore pointed out buildings are allowed to encroach up to 50 feet into another zone.

Miller also asked whether the town's parcel on Pleasant Street, which it will be given back from the MBTA as part of the Greenbush mitigation agreement, could be used for access to the site.

"Could the town consider it?" she asked.

Town planner Liz Harrington said she would like to see the town get creative and think of ways to mitigate the situation, but there is an issue with the town losing spaces in the town parking lot during Greenbush construction. She said it would be something to look into, but the town might not go along with it. Allowing access over town land would also require permission from Town Meeting, which cannot be counted on as a solution.

Some residents also felt the use of the building was unclear. Brown said he intends to have small business owners as tenants, who will use the space to serve as a home base but do most of their work on job sites. He said tradesmen such as plumbers or electricians would be the kinds of tenants he has in mind.

Due to the uncertainty, Steve Hadfield, 8 Cushing St., asked whether the board could restrict the hours of operation for the building. He said there is always the possibility plumbers or electricians could be called to work in the middle of the night.

"I understand having a business next to a residential area, there is a concern there, but it's not fair to say you can only operate a few hours per day," said Moore, adding sometimes, services are needed at odd hours. He said having someone come to the building at perhaps 5 a.m. is no different than having a neighbor go into his garage at the same time. However, Moore said a restriction could be placed on deliveries, which would be much more noisy.

The board approved the plans with a 2-1 vote, and imposed the conditions that deliveries be restricted to after 7 a.m. and no later than 9 p.m.; that access through the town's land be explored; and that any questions posed by the town's engineering consultant, including a property line question from an abutter, be cleared up before final plans are signed.

Silver lining for Seadogs

SSBC 12-and-Under team finishes second in country; Cohasset's Anders Goetz named to All-Tournament Team

Editor's Note: This story and photo was taken from the South Shore Baseball Club's web site, www.ssbc.com.

The South Shore Baseball Club's 12-and-Under Seadogs team finished second at last month's national tournament in Minnesota.

In the national championship game played on Thursday, July 28, Sammy Stewart of the Baltimore Buzz pitched a complete game four-hitter with just one walk to top the Seadogs 3-1. Earlier in the tourney, Stewart shutout the Seadogs 6-0.

Trailing 3-1 and with runners on first and second and two outs in the Seadog's final at bat, Phil Sciretta hit a line drive bullet right at the second baseman to end it.

"We had our chance and Phil hit a screamer, but they made the play," said Seadogs head coach Jay Adams.

Donnie Murray came on in relief to pitch four strong innings to keep the Dogs in it.

The Seadogs began the tourney very strongly with two shutouts back on Sunday, July 24, topping the West Des Moines (Iowa) Heat 2-0 and then the Fort Dodge (Iowa) White Sox 3-0. Matt Goreham did the opening game honors in a complete game, 10 strikeout effort. The Seadogs scored single runs in the fourth and fifth innings. Goreham drove in the first run himself with an RBI single, while Chris Kinsley's single plated the fifth inning tally.

These Seadogs, who have become well known nationally for their excellent defense, were led by the left side of the infield of David Podurgiel (3B) and Kingsley (SS).

"For two straight years in the Nationals, I believe that no team has played better defense than our guys."

Seadogs coach Jay Adams

In Sunday's second game, Jordan Jenkins spun the complete game masterpiece and added a two run, first inning homer in a dominant performance that resulted in a 3-0 win. Sciretta's single delivered the third run in the third.

Johnny Adams had two hits and made several excellent plays at second base and Nick Barker was a force behind the plate. The opening day doubleheader sweep was especially gratifying since the Seadogs were missing four players who hadn't yet arrived due to their Little Legue tournaments.

Monday's twinbill was a different story as the Dogs fell twice, first to the East Cobb (GA) Astros 2-0 and then to the Apopka (FL) Black Sox, 9-2. Christian Hoxsie's pitching effort was the opening game highlight as the hard throwing righthander held the Astros to just four hits. East Cobb scored single runs in the third and fifth innings as the Seadog bats were tamed.

In Monday's second game, the bats remained silent in Apopka's win. With an overall record of 2-2, the Dogs still needed another win in their next two games to be sure to advance.

On Tuesday morning, the Seadogs met Sammy Stewart of the Baltimore Buzz for the first time. The Seadog offense remain silent in the 6-0 Buzz win. Donny Murray and Jonathan Kelley pitched three innings apiece in the defeat. The loss put the Seadogs into a must win situation in the afternoon game.

In a do-or-die situation, the Seadogs outlasted the East Cobb (GA) Rebels in a thrilling, eight inning 9-8 win. Alex Pompeo scored the winner on a Rebels error in the top of the eighth as the Dogs hung on for dear life. Pompeo reached on a fielder's choice, stole second and scored on the error. Twice the Seadogs narrowly escaped to keep the game alive with great defense.

In the bottom of the sixth, with the game tied at six,

Sailors make their wave to Cohasset

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Some of the region's and country's best sailors are in Cohasset this weekend for the 210 Fleet National Championship Regatta.

The annual event was held in Hingham last year; this season it is being hosted by the Cohasset Yacht Club.

The four-day race began on Thursday and ends this Sunday. Charlie Henry, president of the International 210 class, said Tuesday there are 28 boats competing in the event.

Thirteen of those boats - which are just under 30 feet in length - come from the CYC fleet, captained by Michael Dickey. Other vessels will be coming from Hingham, Falmouth, Gloucester and South Boston, along with out-of-state competitors from Wisconsin and Michigan.

Thirteen of 28 competing vessels come from the Cohasset Yacht Club fleet.

The winners (skipper and two crew) of the race have their names engraved on the C. Raymond Hunt trophy, and get to keep the trophy for a year until the next national race. Otherwise, Henry says, "It just boils down to bragging rights."

C. Raymond Hunt was an internationally known and respected helmsman and yacht designer. After World War II, Hunt designed the 210 boat.

He also developed the famed 13-foot Boston Whaler in the mid-1950's. Thousands have been built and the design has changed little through the years. His most significant contribution to powerboats, however, was the development of the deep-vee.

As for this weekend's race, Henry says the boats figure to be visible from Sandy Beach on the north side of Minot's Light, and also along the Scituate coastline.

"We'll stand out, for sure," Henry said.

For more information on the race, log on to www.210class.com.

Cohasset's Jake Previte (20) and Joe Durkin celebrate a goal during an April game against Scituate. Both recent CHS grads have been named to the Mariner's All-Scholastic boys lacrosse team.

All-Scholastic boys lacrosse team

Cohasset leads the way with 4 honorees

Aidan Buick - Junior Attack - Cohasset

Aidan Buick

As gifted an athlete as there is in the area, Buick makes his second All-Scholastic team of the season after being named to the soccer team in the fall...The team's leading scorer with 99 points this season...Has speed to burn and all the moves around the crease to give himself a good shot opportunity...Also led the soccer team in scoring in the fall...The fifth of five Buick boys to star athletically at CHS, most recently including Ronan (Class of '01) and Conor ('04), both of whom were standouts on the lacrosse field...Cohasset coach Stew Curran: "Aidan is one of the top offensive talents in our league. The attention from opposing defenses that [teammate] Jake got this year, that will probably be Aidan next year. He's that good."

Joe Durkin - Senior Midfield - Cohasset

Joe Durkin

This is Durkin's second Mariner All-Scholastic nod of the season, after making it for football in the fall...Plays both sports the same way: hard-nosed and full tilt all the way. Led Cohasset midfielders in points this season...A solid two-way middie who mixed it up on defense and started a lot of attacks on offense...Also the Skippers' face-off specialist, winning a majority of those opportunities...A Pilgrim Conference All-Star this season. Has played lacrosse since the fourth grade...On the gridiron, rushed for over 1,500 yards for the South Shore League champions...Participated in the Shriners All-Star football game on June 24, an honor bestowed on only

Former Red Sox pitcher and 1967 Cy Young winner Jim Lonborg dropped by the second annual Gregory Francis Moynahan Home Run Derby on Saturday to throw some batting practice. Moynahan, a Scituate native, was 23 years old when he was killed in a car accident in April 2004. Saturday's day-long event raised $7,000 for the Gregory Moynahan Memorial Fund. the elite players on the South Shore...Says football is his favorite sport...Also one of the leading scorers for the hockey team in the winter...Says winning the league in football three out of his four years at CHS, in addition to the postseason success of the lacrosse and hockey teams, rate among his top athletic memories in high school...Will attend the University of New Hampshire, where he will study business...Plans to play club lacrosse there, and may also play club hockey...Cohasset coach Stew Curran: "Joe is just a hard-working kid. He played man up, he played man down; he just does all the little things well."

Crandon Leahy - Senior Defense - Cohasset

Simply put, one of the best defenders in the Pilgrim Conference...Uses his size (6-foot-3, 200 pounds), speed and strength to wreak havoc on opposing attackers...Not afraid to mix it up and knock an opponent to the ground, and then let him know about it afterward...Also possesses quality stick-handling skills, and often forayed into the offensive end to start an attack for his team...Named an Eastern Mass All-Star as one of the best players in the state...Just a remarkable all-around athlete...Friends and teammates still talk about his 73-yard touchdown run against Westwood in last December's Div. 3 playoff game, in which he broke at least six tackles...Also a top defender for the CHS hockey team...Will attend prep school next year at Northfield Mt. Herman in Northfield, Mass, where he will play football and try out for the hockey team...Says he will likely play lacrosse at a four-year university...Cohasset coach Stew Curran: "Crandon is a commanding physical presence. He's really fast, he's really big and he loves to play the game. Those three ingredients are going to carry him a long way."

Jake Previte - Senior Attack - Cohasset

Jake Previte

Ends his career at Cohasset High School in possession of the all-time scoring record with over 240 points...Makes his second straight Mariner All-Scholastic team...Second on the team this year with 86 points, despite constant double- and triple-teaming from opponents...That attention opened the way for teammate Aidan Buick to have a monster season...Possesses great quickness and stick skills...A hard-working leader who loves the game and leaves everything he has on the field...Has also played for the Mass Elite program and in the Bay State games...Brother of Paul Previte (Class of '02), also a CHS lacrosse standout...Will be attending St. Michael's in Vermont, where he will play Div. 2 lacrosse in the ultra-competitive Northeast-10 conference...Cohasset coach Stew Curran: "Jake was our second leading scorer, but more importantly, he was a great captain and a great leader. He's one of those kids who has always loved to play lacrosse. It is a sad day to see him leave."

Dan Folan - Senior Defense - Braintree

No stranger to our All-Scholastic teams: has made it twice for hockey and now makes his second consecutive appearance for lacrosse...An excellent stick-handler who would often bring the ball downfield and set up the Wamps offense...A very physical defender who got the most out of his 5-foot-10, 170-pound frame...Won the Bob Lynch Leadership Award at BHS's spring awards ceremony, and is generally commended by his coaches for his leadership as much as he is for his athleticism...Also a star on the ice for Braintree's hockey team, as he was a three-year varsity player and Bay State Conference Second Team All-Star this winter...Will be attending Massasoit in the fall, with his eyes on transferring to another school to study criminal justice and play either lacrosse or hockey...Braintree coach Kevin Kay: "Dan was the rock of the team. He was always there at the start of practice, every single day. He's just a tremendous leader. He is a warrior, a really competitive kid. He's definitely as solid as it gets for a high school player."

Matt Lynch - Senior
Midfield - Braintree

Another familiar face in our All-Scholastic section: Has twice been honored for basketball, and was named Honorable Mention for lacrosse last season...Named the team's Most Valuable Player, leading the Wamps with 66 points (34 goals, 32 assists)...A talented two-way player who was as critical to his team's defense as its attack...Has great vision of the field, and always knows where to be...Has played lacrosse since elementary school, when his father, Bob, and uncle Mike started the Braintree youth lacrosse program...Says his sophomore lacrosse season, where the Wamps made it all the way to the Div. 1 state semifinals, is among his top athletic memories at BHS...Will attend Westfield State University, where he will play basketball...Was the BHS basketball team's leading scorer the last two seasons...Braintree coach Kevin Kay: "Matt was the pure, clear MVP of our team. There were a couple games where he just carried us. When we needed him offensively, he was always there. Defensively, I've never seen a more solid defensive midfielder."

Dave Hurley - Senior (Capt.)
Attack - Hanover

Was a shining star on a team still building and trying to make its presence known in the highly-competitive Pilgrim Conference...Hurley was a huge standout offensively for the Indians and he handled his role extremely well...The senior racked up 66 points on 51 goals, 15 assists this season to lead the Hanover team...Was the man everyone went to offensively and he typically delivered multiple goals in games (i.e. seven goals, one assist vs. Sandwich; eight goals vs. Plymouth)...His performance down the stretch helped the Indians finish the regular season with a 10-8 record, qualifying them for postseason play for the second time in the program's history...There, Hurley scored a pair of goals in a tough overtime 9-8 loss to Scituate...The PC All-star also played football and hockey at HHS...He will continue his lacrosse career at Roger Williams next year.

Mike Quinn - Senior
Midfielder - Hingham

After guiding the Hingham team to a berth in the Div. 2A Super Bowl last fall, Quinn followed it up with a solid lacrosse campaign this spring...The Pilgrim Conference All-star was among the most reliable scorers for the Harbormen, tallying 41 points on 25 goals, 16 assists...His calm and cool demeanor on the field was invaluable, particularly against Hingham's toughest opponents...Quinn netted four goals against PC rivals, Duxbury, the unbeaten Div. 1 state champs...His performance helped guide the Harbormen to an 11-7 record during the regular season and assisted them in winning two postseason games in the Div. 2 Eastern Mass. tourney...Was also the quarterback of the HHS football team and a defenseman on its hockey team, earning Patriot League All-star and team MVP honors in each sport...Quinn will continue his lacrosse career at Middlebury College.

Aidan Buick scored a team-high 99 points this season.

Chris Ryan - Junior
Defense - Hingham

Just a junior, Ryan's play in the backfield proved invaluable to Hingham...This All-American defender was named the Best Defensive Player by a Pilgrim Conference loaded with talented squads from Duxbury, Marshfield, and Falmouth...His stingy play on defense helped keep the Harbormen squad in several games this season, including a slim 6-5 loss to perennial power Winchester in the Div. 2 Eastern Mass. tourney...Also helped hold Div. 1 state champs Duxbury in check, as only seven goals separated the two squads in a regular season loss...Ryan also did his part in aiding the Hingham offense, tallying eight points on one goal, seven assists, as the Harbormen went 11-7 in the regular season (7-2 in the PC)...Also an excellent student active in student council and National Honor Society, Ryan hopes to play lacrosse at the collegiate level, but still has one more year to shine at Hingham.

Jesse Stevenson - Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder - Marshfield

From the backfield to the front-line, this talented midfielder was always involved in Marshfield's plays...A standout at midfield throughout his MHS career, Stevenson earned Pilgrim Conference and Eastern Mass. All-star status for his play this spring as the Rams went 13-5 during the regular season...Was a huge offensive contributor, tallying 55 points on 25 goals, 30 assists...Played a big role in netting a regular season 7-5 victory over PC rival Falmouth, which was an Div. 2 Eastern Mass. finalist...In that same tourney, Stevenson helped guide the Rams to the quarterfinals, where they were narrowly defeated 9-6 by a tough North Andover team...Also captained the MHS soccer team in the fall and played hockey during the winter...Stevenson plans to attend Connecticut College in the fall where he will major in Sports Medicine.

Brian Walker - Senior (Capt.)
Goalie - Marshfield

After playing behind an All-American goalie for the previous two seasons, Walker wowed his Pilgrim Conference foes and garnered attention from several area schools with his stellar play...Was absolutely astounding this season as he recorded 252 saves in stopping 74 percent of the shots he saw in goal...Registered a trio of shutouts against New Bedford, Plymouth South, and Reading and allowed five or fewer goals

Kyle Laffin - Junior
Defense - Norwell

Laffin makes his first appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic team...Has good size (6-feet, 180 pounds) and the skills to match...Quick on his feet with solid stick-handling skills...A captain-elect for next season...Started playing lacrosse in the sixth grade; had been playing baseball in the spring up until high school...Also plays outside linebacker for the NHS football team...Has played lacrosse in the Bay State Games for the last three years...Hails from a very athletic family: Older sister Katelynn currently plays ice hockey at Providence College; Older brother Ryan plays baseball for Salem State College; Younger brother Troy, entering the 6th grade, plays football, basketball and lacrosse...Plans on playing lacrosse in college...Norwell coach Jay Williams: "Kyle was the main guy that [assistant] Coach Cimini leaned on for most of our defensive schemes. He makes the calls back there, much like a middle linebacker in football."

Ben Brigham - Senior
Attack - Scituate

An ultra-talented offensive player who helped carry the Sailors to the second round of the Div. 3 tournament...Makes his first Mariner All-Scholastic appearance...Possesses remarkably fluid stick-handling skills, and can handle and shoot with both hands...Showed that skill when he scored the game-winning goal, left-handed, in the first round of the tournament against Hanover, his fifth goal of that game...Finished the season with a team-high 92 points (56 goals, 36 assists)...Named to the Pilgrim Conference All-Star team...Named the Sailors MVP...A varsity player his entire four-year career...Started playing the game six years ago, when best friend (and fellow All-Scholastic) Conor O'Brien and his father, Vinny O'Brien, convinced him to give the sport a shot...Also golfed and skied for SHS...Will attend St. Leo's University, just outside of Tampa, and will play Div. 2 lacrosse there...Scituate coach Rick Bagby: "If I had to choose one player from our league, after [Duxbury's] Max Quinzani, I'd be hard-pressed to pick someone other than Ben. He's so tough, so resilient, and won't give up. He had made himself into a great lacrosse player."

Conor O'Brien - Senior
Attack - Scituate

Combined with best friend and teammate Ben Brigham to create a formidable one-two punch for the Sailors attack...Second on the team in goals (27), assists (29) and points (56)...A strong athlete with solid stick skills...Isn't afraid to get physical and mix it up with opposing defenders...Won the team's P.J. Trendowicz award as the team's unsung hero...Father Vinny O'Brien helped start up the Scituate youth lacrosse program eight years ago...Has played the game since he was 11 years old...Says making the lacrosse state tournament his junior and senior year rates as his top athletic memory from SHS...Played guard and defensive tackle for the Sailors football team...Will attend St. Anselm College in New Hampshire, where he will play football and study business...Scituate coach Rick Bagby: "Conor is just a bull out there. He's a strong kid, and he protects the stick so well with his body. He's almost unstoppable with the ball going at the net. He's just a force out there, and a great guy to have on your team."

Scott Keeley, -Senior (Capt.)
Midfielder - Weymouth

The senior captain concluded his high school career as perhaps the top male athlete in his class... Three-sport athlete was selected as a captain in all three sports... A four-year starter at midfield, this midfielder was named to the Bay State League all-star team for the second-straight year... One of the top scorers on the Wildcats, the senior also provided some clutch last-second plays that lead to wins...Set up a game-winning overtime goal by stealing an outlet pass and dishing to DanBertoni in front of the net against Framingham in an 8-7 win... Broke an 8-8 tie with a goal in the final minute in a 9-8 win over Braintree...All-state performer in wrestling, he also started at fullback and linebacker in football. ..Will attend to Curry College to play football and lacrosse.

Jimmy Adams made a diving catch going to his left with the bases loaded and two outs to keep things alive. Again in the seventh the Dogs narrowly escaped. With a runner on third and two outs in the home half, the would be winning run was thrown out trying to score on a ball that eluded catcher Jon Kelley. Winning pitcher Matt Goreham took the toss and applied the tag in a bang-bang play that again kept the Seadogs alive.

All 15 players played a part in the dramatic win. Cohasset's Anders Goetz had two big hits and was excellent at shortstop. Jenkins had two more hits and was great in relief (1 1/3 innings). Goreham (winning pitcher with 2 1/3 innings of relief) and Nick Barker each had suicide squeeze bunts to help ignite the recently lethargic offense. Kevin Godin and Podurgiel each had two hits including triples and John Mullen had a clutch RBI single to get a short lived lead in the seventh.

With the win the Seadogs advanced to the final eight, a single elimination tournament, as the #7 seed.

The final eight began with on Wednesday with a rematch with the #2 seeded Apopka (FL) Black Sox. The Black Sox were 6-0 in the earlier pool and had allowed just ten runs in their six wins. This time was different as Matt Goreham and Jordan Jenkins shared mound duties on short rest and held off the powerful Black Sox lineup in a 5-3 Seadogs win. Jenkins picked up his second win of the tournament.

Trailing 2-0 in the fourth, Jon Kelley stepped up with the bases loaded and delivered a long double to left, clearing the bases and giving the Dogs a 4-3 lead. Jimmy Adams followed with an RBI single, Phil Sciretta's fifth inning RBI single made the 5-3 final. David Podurgiel was the defensive man of the day at third base. He handled a bases loaded, in between hop and threw the hitter out at first to end things.

With the win the Dogs advanced to take on the third-ranked Scorpions of Illinois. In another extra inning thriller played later on Wednesday, Matt Goreham's single in the bottom of the ninth gave the boys of SSBC a 4-3 win, advancing them to the Championship Game. Phil Sciretta worked a gutsy 5 1/3 innings on the mound. John Mullen followed up with 3 2/3 innings of scoreless relief for the win.

Nick Barker led off the ninth with a bunt single, taking second on a throwing error. He advanced to third on a great bunt by Kevin Godin before Goreham's hit sent the Dogs home as winners. Goreham had another RBI single earlier in the game. This day's defensive stalwarts included catcher Kelley who picked off a runner at second in extra innings and the middle men Anders Goetz (SS) and Jimmy Adams (2B).

The win sent the Dogs into the final game and the rematch with the Baltimore Buzz and Sammy Stewart.

The Silver Medal was the highest finish ever for a Seadog team in the National Championship and culminated a fantastic season. Clearly the Seadogs were proud and pleased with their showing and had nothing but praise for the championship Baltimore Buzz, who had the son of former Baltimore Orioles ironman Cal Ripken on their squad and the future Hall of Famer in the dugout as an assistant coach.

"We got significant contributions from every Seadog player," Coach Adams said with obvious pride. "For two straight years in the Nationals, I believe that no team has played better defense than our guys."

The Seadogs placed four players on the All-Tournament Team - Anders Goetz, Matt Goreham of Quincy, Jordan Jenkins of Scituate and Phil Sciretta of Duxbury.

'Sweet swing'

Hundreds gather for event to honor Greg Moynahan

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

It was at the age of 10 that Greg Moynahan acquired the nickname that he would carry for the rest of his life.

His Little League coach implored Greg's teammates to watch Greg while he was at the plate, saying he had the "sweetest swing" he had ever seen.

Greg passed away in April 2004 at the age of 23 in a car accident. Up until that day - and even after - the moniker stuck.

"Even at the wake, people were calling him 'Sweet Swing,'" recalls Ron Moynahan, Greg's father.

Greg's memory lives on through his biggest passion in life: baseball. And on Saturday, the town hosted the second annual Gregory Francis Moynahan Memorial Home Run Derby.

Called a "complete success" by its main organizer, Eric Gill, the derby drew 180 hitters of all different ages, all swinging for the fences to raise money for the Gregory Moynahan Memorial Fund.

"Every year, it amazes me how many people show up and are willing to be so generous," said Gill, Moynahan's longtime friend and fellow Little League umpire. "I think it really shows how good Greg was at bringing people together."

Ron Moynahan expressed similar sentiments on Tuesday, three days after the event.

"It's definitely amazing what his friends do and how much they miss him," Ron said. "With Greg, the one thing he did the best was bring people of all age groups together."

Those who knew Greg will tell you his love for sports was matched by his kindness. His father recalls one instance when Greg was umpiring a game, and a special needs athlete was at the plate.

"The kid hit a ground ball, and he was out by probably 40 feet," Ron said. "Greg went over to him and said, 'They just got you by an inch.' After the game, parents came over to Greg and told him, 'You can't believe what you did for that kid.'"

With memories like that, it is no wonder that so many turned out for an event in honor of Greg, who is survived by his parents, Ron and Marguerite, and younger sister Kaitlin.

In the Derby's finals for the 17-and-over division, Scituate's Brendan Stone topped Dave Liffers of Norwell, 10-6. Liffers put on a show in the first round, smacking 21 homers. It was Stone who prevailed in the end, winning $150, which he immediately gave back to the Moynahan fund.

Other winners were Mike Signorelli (15 and 16 age group), Matt Stewart (13 and 14), Justin Broderick (11 and 12), and JC Brassard (9 and 10), all of Scituate.

Scituate's Jim Lonborg, a former pitcher and Cy Young winner for the Red Sox, was one of several pitching volunteers. Ron said Lonborg was a hero of Greg's, and his son had one of every baseball card ever made of Lonborg.

Kudos are also in order for SHS sophomores Steve Ferriter and Steve Corsaro, who served as the derby's catchers, squatting behind the plate for hours on end.

Burgers and dogs were provided by Maria's Pizza, while The Sausage Guy gave 20 pounds of his famous sausage for the event's cookout. Bank of America and Ocean Spray provided the drinks, and if that wasn't enough to cool you off, the Cohasset Call Firefighters Association rented a dunk tank for the festivities.

Donations made for the events raffle included: Red Sox and Patriots tickets; a round of golf for four (provided by three courses: Widow's Walk, Scituate Country Club and Indian Pond CC in Kingston); an autographed photo of Trot Nixon; a bowling birthday party with 15 free strings of bowling at Satuit Bowlaway; a $100 savings bond, donated by Scituate selectman Joe Norton; autographed t-shirt and CD from the Dropkick Murphys, donated by band member Ken Casey; a rod and reel combo from Belsan's Bait and Tackle; gift certificates for two pairs of sneakers, donated by Reebok.

Gill said Tuesday the event raised about $7,000. The fund will award a $1,000 scholarship to two members of the upcoming SHS senior class. The remainder of the funds will go toward maintenance of Greg's Memorial at Greenbush Field, his favorite stomping grounds.

OBITUARY

Linda J. Bilton

Former Delta flight attendant

Linda J. (Hurld) Bilton, 54, of Cohasset, formerly of Quincy, died on August 9, 2005 at her home after a long illness.

Mrs. Bilton was born, raised and educated in South Boston and graduated from South Boston High School. She was the daughter of Joan W. (Wells) McCormick of Milton and the late William B. Hurld. She lived in Cohasset for the past twenty years. She worked at Delta Airlines as a flight attendant and in flight reservations for fifteen years.

She leaves her children; Kerri J. Brison of Pinehurst, N.C., Brook W. Melle of Weymouth, Gregory M. Bilton of Arlington, Va. and Bryan K. Bilton of Tempe, Ariz.; two sisters, Dawn McGee of Milton and Diane Joyce of Quincy; three brothers, William Hurld, John Hurld, both of South Boston and Donald Hurld of Quincy. She also leaves two grandchildren, Alexander W. Brison and Sophie J. Brison, both of Pinehurst, N.C.

A memorial Mass will be held on Monday, Aug. 15 at 11 a.m. at St. Anthony's Church, 129 Main St., Cohasset. Visiting hours and interment are private. Arrangements made by Downing Cottage Funeral Chapel in Hingham.

In lieu of flowers, donations in Mrs. Hurld's memory may be made to the Dana Farber Cancer Institute, 44 Binney St., Boston, MA 02115.

Mrs. Hurld's family would like to thank her many friends and neighbors for their support during this difficult time.

Trinity College carillonneur to end Cohasset summer series

Daniel Kerry Kehoe, carillonneur of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., will play the final recital in the 81st Annual Series of Summer Carillon Recitals at St. Stephen Church on the church's 57-bell carillon Sunday, Aug. 14. Featured will be original music for carillon by Flor Peeters, Theophil Rusterholz and Daniel Kehoe, transcriptions of classics by Chopin and Handel, a group of hymn arrangements, three Beatles songs and a group of Broadway tunes.

The hour-long recital begins at 6 p.m. and is free of charge. It will take place rain or shine; in case of rain, listen from your parked cars.

The hour-long recital begins at 6 p.m. and is free of charge. It will take place rain or shine; in case of rain, listen from your parked cars. Printed programs will be distributed on Cohasset Common, and will also be available in a stand near the church courtyard on Highland Avenue extension. Listeners are invited to bring lawn chairs, blankets and picnics. After the recitals there will be an "open tower" demonstration for all who wish to climb the 45 steps to the carillon.

For further information, call St. Stephen Church at 781-383-1083, or the church carillonneur, Sally Slade Warner, at 978-475-2599, or the assistant carillonneur, Mary Kennedy, at 781-383-9599.

Old Ship Meetinghouse in Hingham is open for tours

Every summer descendants of the early settlers visit Hingham and the Old Ship Meetinghouse, the oldest structure in the country in continuous use as a church. Visitors can often find an ancestor in the list of early settlers and can often see the very pew in which that family sat.

The frame, those great oak timbers that were raised by the townspeople over the span of three days in July, 324 years ago, still stands. Through August the Meetinghouse, on Main Street across from Loring Hall, will be open for tours from 1-4 every Sunday through Friday.

IT'S HAPPENING

Mark your calendars for Saturday, Aug. 27 when the Hingham Symphony Orchestra will perform its traditional summer concert at Glastonbury Abbey off Rte. 228.

Hingham Symphony Orchestra at Glastonbury Aug. 27

Hingham Symphony Orchestra will perform its traditional last Saturday in August concert on the wide lawn at Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham, Aug. 27 at 4:30 p.m. In the event of rain, the concert will be held in the First Parish Church on Cohasset Common.

On the simple wooden stage, orchestra musicians will perform their favorite solo and small ensemble pieces. The program features selections from Vivaldi's Four Seasons, plus various works for combinations of strings, piano and harpsichord.

This is a family event. Concert goers are encouraged to bring their lawn chairs and a picnic supper. Soft drinks and snacks will be available for purchase.

Tickets are $15 adults; $10 seniors. Children are admitted free. Tickets may be purchased at the gate, or in advance at the Abbey Bookstore, Hingham Public Library, Nobles, and La Petite Maison in Hingham Square. Call 781-740-5694.

Minot roundabout welcomes rowers

The Cohasset Maritime Institute invites all kinds of oar and paddle craft to its Minot's Light Roundabout – a race around the lighthouse.

A 4-1/2 mile open water race, the course runs from just outside the Cohasset breakwater out to historic (and some say, haunted) Minot Ledge Light, around behind the light, over to the 1G lighted bell, and back to the breakwater.

Here's the schedule:

- Cox'n's Meeting at 10 a.m.
- Fixed seat craft start at 11:10 a.m.
- Sliding seat craft start at 11:22 a.m.

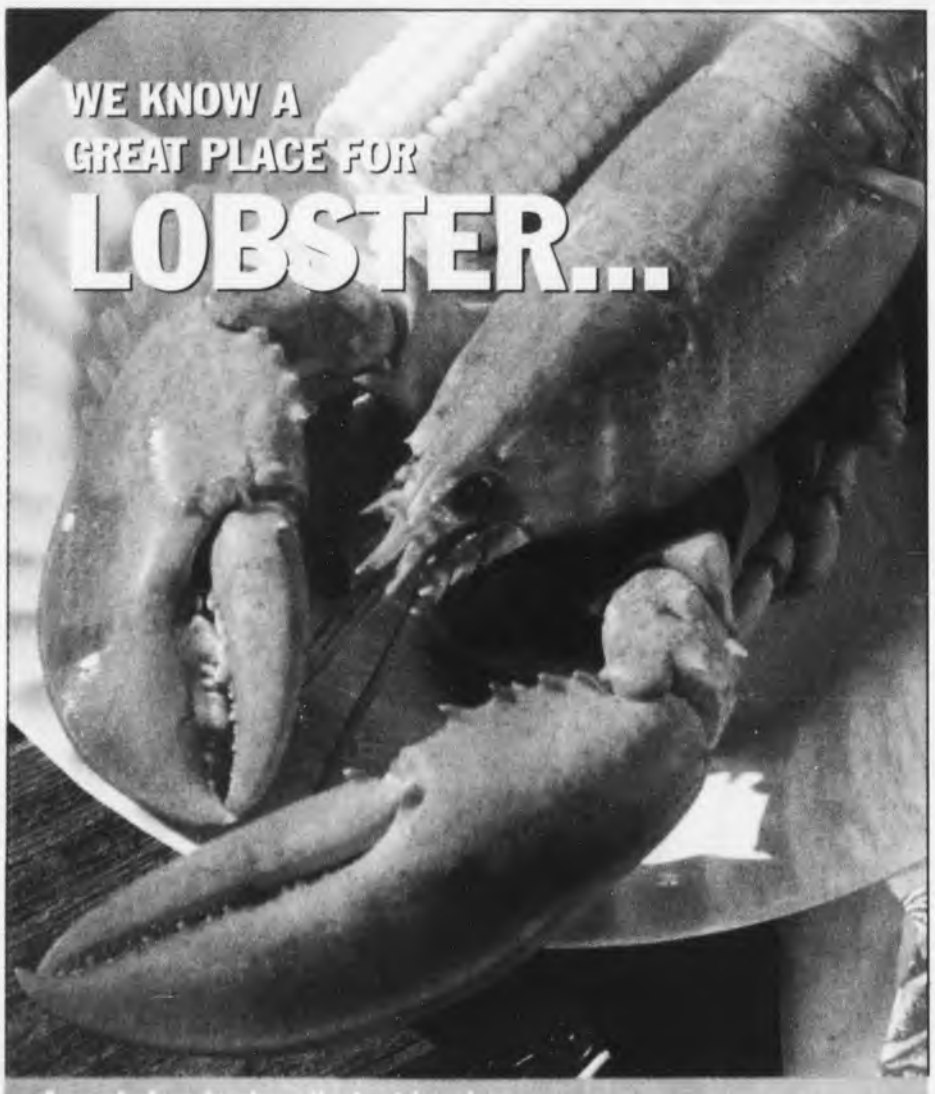
High tide at is approximately 1 p.m.

Following the Roundabout, join CMI as rowers travel under Cohasset's Border Street Bridge and explore the Gulf River Estuary. Participants will spend about an hour on the Gulf and return before the height of tide drops too far to make the passage back out to Cohasset Harbor.

Here's the schedule:

- Flotilla Meeting at 1 p.m.
- Head for Border Street Bridge at 1:30 p.m.
- Enter the Gulf around 1:40 p.m.

Return under the Bridge around 2:40 p.m.



Everyone is invited!

Entry - $25 per rower/paddler covers either or both gatherings. Includes refreshments, commemorative t shirt, race prizes. Meet at CMI's Boathouse at the Cohasset Boat Ramp, Parker Ave., off Border Street.

Out of town cars and trailers may park at Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset Common Each participant must carry a lifejacket, whistle, and bailer, and sign a waiver Waivers and registration forms will be distributed at registration tables on Aug. 21. For more ore information, contact Mike Dick

HANDMADE

ORIENTAL RUG EVENT

IF YOU HAVE A HARD TIME FINDING A PARKING SPACE... DON'T BLAME US!

They're making limousines longer than ever, and those darn millionaires have a hard time saying no to a genuine bargain! (especially when they can save on the sales tax!)

Marjorie has put together a very special event for our Massachusetts Stores only: a fine collection of exceptional quality rugs from all over the world.

So squeeze your way through the parking lot and shop with the millionaires!

2919 RUGS

TO BE SOLD AT: 50% to 77% OFF FANCY RUGSTORE PRICES!

WHY SO CHEAP? WE'VE COMBINED THREE LOTS:

Lot #1: From Fifth Avenue in Midtown Manhattan, one of the most respected importers of Oriental rugs, walked into his showroom and discovered that a pipe had leaked.

Some rugs got one drop, some two, some a bit more. All rugs were declared to have some sort of "damage", but when you see them you will probably have a hard time finding it.

Nevertheless, the rug importer had been paying premiums for so long that the insurance man declared anything that was even NEAR the drips to be removed.

Lot #2 A Midtown Manhattan importer was turning his business over to his son-in-law, so they down-sized to a smaller space. But, they had to store the rugs in huge stacks, making them difficult to display...So they called Marjorie. They let her pick and choose the rugs she wanted, and she brought home a great selection of Indian, Persian, and Turkish rugs at bargain prices.

Lot #3: While everyone was off this summer enjoying the beach and getting tanned, Marjorie was walking around the empty halls of the rug importers searching for bargains.

With so many companies going out of business or downsizing their inventory, you can be sure that she was offered some great deals. And, she picked the cream of the crop to present in our new Fall season at our Masachusetts Stores.

..SHOP SOMEPLACE ELSE!

We tell you that these are great deals...We tell you that rugs are much more expensive elsewhere.

But don't take our word for it! Shop around. The more you look, the more you'll love our prices.

If you don't have the time to shop, ask a friend where they got their beautiful rug. They might swear you to secrecy when they tell you, "Building #19."

WE WANT YOU TO LOVE YOUR NEW RUG!

We want you to love your new rug so much that you throw a party to show it off...and we'd love it if you told everybody where you got it and how little you paid. But if, for any reason, your new rug isn't good enough to brag about, just bring it back within 30 days for a full refund.

SATURDAY & SUNDAY: NO SALES TAX!

Most of the almost 2919 handmade rugs that we have to offer you are under $2500 and are therefore tax free for this day. But, we do have about 267 rugs (we can only give you an approximate count- if we had computers and scanners to get an exact count, we'd have to charge you more money for the rugs) that are over $2500. They are still beautiful, and still excellent bargains, but they will have to be taxed. It's the law.

Store Hours: Monday thru Saturday 9AM to 9PM: Sunday, 11AM to 6PM

EARWAX CONCERNS

Earwax (cerumen), produced by glands in the outer part of the ear canal, helps keep the ear canal healthy by discouraging foreign objects from entering and by maintaining the acid balance. Usually, wax moves out of the ear canal on its own by slowly migrating to the outside of the ear. However, some people produce excessive amounts of earwax and have poor self-cleaning mechanisms. Hearing instrument users must be alert to cerumen build-up because an instrument's ear mold may prevent the wax from migrating outward. As a result, the wax can compromise the function of the instrument. To prevent this problem, hearing instrument users should ask for instruction on cleaning their instruments and removing cerumen build-up from their ears.

When it is hard to distinguish between the inability to hear because of ear wax or other physical impairment, or because of continual bombardment of noise, it's time for a hearing test. Don't miss out on the sounds of life. Have a free hearing evaluation at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER so that we may accurately determine the reason behind your hearing loss. And if a hearing instrument is indicated, rest assured we carry a full range of brands and types here at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, we'll find the one that is right for you. PH: 781-337-1144. All in-office repairs are free for all makes of hearing aids.

P.S. Never try to remove earwax from your ear with an instrument such as a toothpick. You may perforate your eardrum.

Get adrenaline flowing on Vermont mountain adventure

By TIM JONES
SPECIAL TO THE HERALD

Sandwiched as they are between the high, forever wild Adirondacks of New York and the craggy and unforgiving White Mountains of New Hampshire, you'd expect the Green Mountains of Vermont to be challenging, too. But the truth is, most hiking in Vermont is surprisingly pleasant, just rugged enough to be interesting, but not as likely to kill you as either of its wilder neighbors.

There are so many hiking trails in Vermont, it's hard to know where to start. The "Day Hiker's Guide to Vermont," published by the Green Mountain Club (www.greenmountainclub.org) has more than 300 pages of maps and trail descriptions. And it doesn't include either of the two legendary hiking trails that transit the Green Mountains a: The Long Trail (see sidebar) which runs the length of the state and 148 miles of the Appalachian Trail.

But one of the best-kept secrets in Vermont hiking is one of its worst-kept secrets in the winter: ski areas. Not only do the ski areas offer wonderfully civilized, surprisingly economical accommodations in the summer, they also put you right in the heart of great hiking. In fact, you'd need several summer vacations just to explore the hiking near ski areas in Vermont.

And ski areas offer something that most eastern hiking trails lack: continuous views. From Mount Snow and nearby Haystack (800-245-SNOW; www.mountsnow.com) to Jay Peak (802-988-2611; www.jaypeakresort.com) on the Canadian border, every ski area has, somewhere on its slopes, an access road that meanders to the top of the mountain, following the path of least resistance. Unless there's serious construction going on, as there is currently at Stowe and Burke (where they are installing new chairlifts this summer), these access roads function as smoother-than-average hiking trails. And, there's an added bonus. Where most hiking trails in Vermont are largely a walk through the woods with occasional openings that allow you a look at the larger landscape, ski area access roads allow you to stop wherever you need a rest and pretend you're just admiring the ever-expanding views.

All by itself near the New Hampshire border, Ascutney (800-243-0011; www.ascutney.com) in Brownsville, offers an absolutely classic access-road hike with no crowds and wonderful scenery (even on 4th of July weekend, we didn't see another hiker).

If you or any of your companions aren't experienced hikers, Smugglers' Notch (800-451-8752; www.smuggs.com) in Jeffersonville, is probably the resort where you want to start your hiking adventures. Daily throughout the summer season they offer both guided and self-guided walks, "wikes" (a little more than a walk; a little less than a hike) and mountain adventures. Stay a few days at Smuggs and you can sample adventures that are rated just like ski trails, from "easiest" to "experts only."

For example, the "Family Ties River Walk" is an exploration along "No-Name Brook" in Smugglers' Village, specifically designed for families with very young children. If you don't have kids or grandkids for these, borrow some. Ditto for the "Maple Sugar" and "Watermelon" walks.

At the other end of the spectrum there's the 6-hour "Experts Only" guided ascent of 4,395-foot Mt. Mansfield, the highest point in Vermont. The summit of Mansfield offers views into New Hampshire, across Lake Champlain to New York state, and, on clear days, all the way to Canada.

Hiking at Mount Mansfield showcases the most breathtaking vistas Vermont has to offer.

If you're comfortable hiking on your own, the mountains around and between Stowe (802-253-3000; www.stowe.com) and Bolton Valley (877-9BOLTON; www.boltonvalley.com) and those surrounding Mad River Glen (802-496-3551; www.madriverglen.com) and Sugarbush (802-583-6300; www.sugarbush.com) offer some of the most challenging hiking in Vermont: often steep, rugged, wild and beautiful.

Of course it doesn't all have to be extreme. In Stowe, there's a 5.3 mile, almost flat recreational path that winds among the shops in the village and along the Stowe access road. Bolton has a veritable maze of paths that loop away from and return to their base village. And the Mad River Valley has a system of walking paths, marked, mapped and maintained by the Mad River Path Association (www.madriverpath.org) that are perfect for a stroll on a summer day.

There's no start and no end to the hiking opportunities in Vermont. The best strategy is to just lace up your hiking boots, grab your backpack, and enjoy the lush mountain scenery on the way.

Town goes local for Cook

Deer Hill Partners will build project

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The board of selectmen has appointed Deer Hill Partners, headed up by Cohasset resident George McGoldrick, to build senior housing on the Cook Estate.

"We (Deer Hill Partners, LLC) are excited to have been given this opportunity to build affordable and moderate priced housing for Cohasset residents and their families," McGoldrick said yesterday. "We look forward to working with all of the Town boards to expedite the approval process and anticipate a final project that the entire community will be proud of."

The board made its decision Tuesday, after ranking the three bid submissions based on specifications outlined in the Request for Proposals. Bids were rated using a point system, with the maximum number set at 100 points per selectman.

Selectmen presented their ratings to Town Manager Bill Griffin Monday, and he in turn produced a chart outlining how each selectman rated each proposal. The board announced Deer Hill Partners came out on top with a total of 410.03 points. Cohasset Associates received 392.13, and Northland Residential received 374.76.

"We look forward to working with all of the Town boards to expedite the approval process and anticipate a final project that the entire community will be proud of."
— George McGoldrick, Deer Hill Partners

"I think when the town looks at the numbers, it will see there was a lot of agreement on all three," said Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed, adding there were certain areas where all developers excelled. However, the board was not unanimous in its decision as selectman Rob Spofford felt a proposal with a rental component, such as the Cohasset Associates, should have been chosen instead.

Although he had been in favor of selecting Deer Hill Partners up until the end of last week, Spofford said he changed his mind and cast the lone vote against awarding the company the project.

Former handyman arrested in three-year-old Logan case

Being held in Ohio pending extradition

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The man, whom Polly Logan took under her wing, involving him in local politics and helping him get jobs as a handyman and gardener around town has been arrested in connection with a home invasion and robbery at her house three years ago.

The arrest of Danny Adams, 35, on the charge of receiving property allegedly stolen from Logan, follows on the heels of the recent indictment of Kevin Gunter, 22, of Roxbury, on a similar charge.

The police have not said if they would be seeking other charges against Adams or are pursuing more arrests.

Reached by telephone Logan, who is affectionately known as the grand dame of the Massachusetts Republican Party, said she was pleased with the news that Adams had been apprehended.

"I've said 'all I want for Christmas is to have Danny Adams put in prison,'" she said.

At the time of the robbery in July 2002, Adams was staying at Logan's home in the loggia off the living room.

The perpetrator or perpetrators, who stole Logan's jewelry, silver items and her black 1994 Ford Escort wagon, tied Logan's hands and feet with duct tape and left her in an upstairs bedroom in her Cape Style-home during an oppressive heat wave.

Dangerously dehydrated, Logan – then 77 and who stands about 5 feet tall and weighs about 100 pounds — was found 36 hours later by Adams. He called 9-1-1.

At that time, Cohasset police would not say whether Adams was a suspect in the robbery. But Logan's children,

Parker Avenue wants speeding curbed

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Residents of Parker Avenue think installing removable speed bumps might be an answer to slowing down cars and trucks on their street. While the speed limit is 15 mph, vehicles often travel around 35 to 40 mph on the quiet, mostly residential street off Border Street.

Russ Bonetti, 20 Parker Ave., and Bob Pattison, 19 Parker Ave., spoke to selectmen Tuesday on behalf of their neighborhood.

"We're asking the board to consider, and we'll be glad to pay for, speed bumps," Bonetti said.

The men say speeding has long been an issue on their street. As recent as Tuesday afternoon just prior to the meeting, Bonetti said he witnessed a truck speeding up his road, and even with a dog in the bed of the truck, "It was easily going 45 (mph)."

Bonetti said with the renovation of the Hagerty House into the Center for Student Coastal Research, and the expansion of the marina and rowing club attracting both residents and nonresidents, the amount of traffic in the area has grown considerably. If the speed limit isn't obeyed, he worries there could be an accident on his street.

Pattison echoed Bonetti's sentiments and said there are nine children under the age of six living on the street, and cars barreling through have made for an unsafe situation.

Restoring papers of the past

Cohasset conservator provides expertise

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Most people throw a piece of paper away when it looks old and dingy from years of exposure. But not Cohasset resident Elizabeth Morse. As a paper conservator, she knows from experience that just under the surface, no matter how crumpled and worn a document might be, a treasure could be waiting to be unearthed.

With her expertise, both the Hingham Historical Society and Hingham Public Library have saved some valuable historic pieces for generations to admire.

While to many — the task of restoring documents found scrunched and stuck together in a cardboard box in the basement would seem a daunting task — that was not the case for Morse. Instead, she saw the project as an opportunity to bring part of the town's history back to life.

Vandalism, threat incidents are still under investigation

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The end of the school year at Cohasset Middle High School is always full of excitement — but this year's events were anything but welcome.

In May, students were evacuated after a bullet and threatening note were found outside the school, and in late June, two incidents of vandalism caused thousands of dollars worth of damage.

The Cohasset Police Department has been investigating the incidents.

"We do have another lead regarding the note that we're following up on," said Police Chief James Hussey. He said a bullet similar to the one recovered at the school was found in a Cohasset neighborhood.

Both the note and bullet found at the scene were sent off for forensic processing after the incident. Hussey said the fingerprints are not on file, which means the perpetrator does not have a previous criminal record.

The note and bullet were found outside the school just before 6 a.m. on May 11. Police were immediately called to the school and a "lockdown" situation was instated for the students. Students in grades six through 12 attend Cohasset Middle High School.

"We do have another lead regarding the note that we're following up on."

— Police Chief James Hussey

Due to the investigation into the letter, the specifics regarding what it said, or whether it was hand-written or typed, have not been released nor have details on the type and size of bullet.

Hussey said with the great weather the day the note and bullet were found, it might lead someone to believe the incident was staged as a prank to close school for the day. Hussey said hoax or not, it is a felony. Since Sept.11, the laws have changed regarding terrorist threats, making incidents like this highly punishable, he said.

Vandalism was discovered at the middle-high school on the mornings of June 14 and June 28. The earlier incident included graffiti on walkways and on the athletic department golf cart. Two weeks later, on the last day of school, the damage was much more significant, as vandals smashed windows and painted several exterior walls with profanity and obscene illustrations. They also pulled up shrubs from the ground, and left them strewn about by the entrance to the main office. The golf cart was targeted again, but this time it was turned upside down in front of the school garage doors.

Much of the school area was cordoned off with yellow caution tape as students arrived to school.

Hussey said a surveillance video taken during the second vandalism incident was sent off for enhancement.

"We sent it out to a police agency with video enhancing equipment," said Hussey, but unfortunately, "the tapes are not legible. There's not enough clarity for us to be able to identify any individuals."

However, he said there was other evidence collected from the scene. The investigation is ongoing, he said.

Anyone with information on the note and bullet found at Cohasset Middle-High School or the vandalism which took place there in June may contact the Cohasset Police Department at (781) 383-1055 X1047. Those with information may remain anonymous.

Town gets school building money

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The town has paid back a substantial amount of debt, thanks to reimbursement from the state for school building assistance.

Last Wednesday, Aug. 17, at roughly 10 a.m., the town received a transfer of $19,656,813, to cover costs associated with the construction projects at the Deer Hill elementary school and the middle-high school.

Director of Finance Michael Buckley said the payment represents 75 percent of the 60 percent reimbursement the town has been scheduled to receive from the state for the roughly $42 million project. The town will receive the state's remaining roughly $6 million within the year as a lump sum.

"I want to compliment the community on having the foresight to go forward with these school projects. We're ahead of the curve," said selectman Rob Spofford, who served as chairman of the school building committee. "We would not get that 60 percent today under the new formula."

Buckley explained the town applied to be considered for reimbursement more than five years ago. At that time, the Department of Education helped regulate the process, which required towns submit a very in-depth application. However, today, the rules for reimbursement have changed, and the State Treasurer's office oversees the process.

When Cohasset applied, towns were borrowing 100 percent of the funding necessary to complete their projects, and the state would pay back a portion of the debt. However, the state found it was approving more projects than it had the money to fund, and soon after Cohasset was approved, the state put a freeze on reimbursements.

After the freeze, the formula for reimbursement was changed for new projects, which will now be reimbursed on a sliding scale. Buckley said under the new formula, Cohasset would have received a lot less and would have been pushed to the back of the list for towns waiting to receive reimbursement. "Our timing was good," he said.

Buckley said while the town has paid off $19 million of its roughly $42 million in debt, it still has bonds out for its $15 million share of the project. The town will pay that amount off over the next 19 years — the bond is a 20 year bond which was taken out last year. The town also has a note for $6 million, which is equal to the rest of the state's 75 percent, and will be paid off when the rest of the state funding arrives.

Buckley explained bonds are taken out for loans which will be paid off over the course of more than one year. Notes are paid off in less than one year and generally do not have a principal payment.

To receive the $6 million from the state, an audit will need to be conducted to ensure the town spent its money as it should have. Buckley said guidelines for school building audits have not been set by the Massachusetts School Building Authority as of yet, but once they are, Cohasset is ready to go. Once the audit is complete, it will be submitted and hopefully approved, and the town will receive its money.

Beechwood St. MBTA construction postponed

Construction on the Beechwood Street grade crossing was slated to begin Monday, Aug. 15. However, Town Manager Bill Griffin said construction has temporarily been postponed and there is no definitive date for when it will begin. Griffin said there is an issue with the contractor not being ready to proceed.

Construction of the crossing will require closing Beechwood Street to through traffic, meaning residents who use the road to travel between Rte. 3A and South Main Street will need to find an alternate route.

"As soon as we hear, we'll let you know," Griffin said.

Early meeting for selectmen

The board of selectmen will meet at 6 p.m. Tuesday, Aug. 23. The only item of business on the agenda at the time the Mariner went to press was a continued discussion on the liquor license for Acapulcos, the proposed Mexican restaurant slated for the former KoKo Island building.

Sewer rate hike

On Aug. 1, the sewer commission unanimously voted to increase the sewer rate from $6.70 per 100 cubic feet to $7.70. The average household will see an increase of $108 per year. This represents a 15 percent increase over the fiscal 2005 rates.

The Sewer Commission has raised rates to offset our rising costs and operates as an enterprise fund independently from the town budget. In order to keep up with depreciation, maintenance, operation of the plant, etc., the commission felt that a rate increase was necessary. This is the first increase in more than two years.

Residents with questions should call the sewer commission at 781-383-4116.

Matthew and Martha Logan, took out a temporary restraining order against Adams while their mother was still in the hospital.

Logan holds a faint hope that Adams will say where some of the jewelry and silver — which are family heirlooms — are located.

She praised the Cohasset Police for doing "a fantastic job" and for showing such tenacity in the investigation.

Logan, a native of Iowa who hasn't lost her Midwestern openness, said she first met Adams, who is from Missouri, when he was working at a local florist and he helped put some flowers in her trunk. He did odd jobs and gardening around her home and eventually had his own handyman business.

"He had a very nice side and did very good work," she recalled. But Logan pointed out she's of the generation that can't tell if someone has a drug problem. Police say some of the items stolen from Logan were exchanged for drugs.

Logan even helped Adams get involved in local politics. She nominated him to serve on the Republican Town Committee and he helped out at the polls.

But today Logan holds an entirely different view of Adams.

"I'm relieved they've arrested him," she said. "He's street smart and I often thought he might prey on someone else. He should be in jail."

"I've said 'all I want for Christmas is to have Danny Adams put in prison."

— Polly Logan

The following is the Cohasset Police press release on Adams' arrest:

The Cohasset Police Department announces the arrest of Danny M. Adams, 35, formerly of Cohasset, who will be charged with one count of receiving stolen property valued at over $250 in connection with the robbery and theft of jewelry from Polly Logan of Cohasset in July, 2002. The Cohasset Police Department obtained an arrest warrant on Sunday, Aug. 14, 2005 from the Quincy District Court charging Adams, the former live-in handyman of Logan, with one count of receiving stolen property valued at over $250. The jewelry was valued at more than $500,000.

Cohasset Police stated in an arrest warrant application that shortly after the robbery, Adams sold a portion of Logan's jewelry to Kevin Gunter, a 22-year-old Roxbury man. Cohasset Police also stated that Gunter gave crack cocaine to Adams in exchange for the rings.

Throughout the investigation, Cohasset Police detectives had been keeping track of Adams' whereabouts since he left Massachusetts shortly after the crime occurred. Detectives tracked him to Florida and recently learned that he was working for a carnival operator that was providing the entertainment for numerous carnivals and fairs across the eastern seaboard. Last week, Cohasset detectives tracked Adams to the Ohio State Fair in Columbus, Ohio.

On Thursday, Aug. 11, Cohasset Police Det. Sgt. Gregory Lennon and Det. Garrett Hunt traveled to Columbus, Ohio and after conducting surveillance at the Ohio State Fair, were able to locate and identify Adams. With the assistance of the Ohio State Highway Patrol, Adams was taken into custody without incident on Sunday, Aug. 14 at approximately 7:30 p.m. Adams is currently being held at the Franklin County Jail in Columbus, Ohio, pending extradition to Massachusetts.

The investigation into the robbery continues.

This case was investigated by the Cohasset Police Department and is being prosecuted by the Norfolk County District Attorney's Office, William R. Keating District Attorney.

Pattison said therefore, residents would like to see removable speed bumps installed, which could be used during the summer months when traffic increases on the street. He said neighbors feel comfortable that will provide enough of a deterrent to keep speeding cars at bay.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said in a community he previously worked in, installing speed bumps had been up for consideration, and he conducted a lot of research into them. He said he found they are not always the positive situations residents hope they will be.

Griffin said speed bumps in actuality are not very effective in keeping the rate of travel down, and they increase liability for the town. Parker Avenue is also a public way, which could set a tricky precedent.

"I can predict, there will be no end to the demand for speed bumps once they are put in a public way," he said.

Selectman Michael Sullivan said it is important to note, Parker Avenue is a special circumstance. He said there should never be an instance where a car is traveling at more than 15 mph because of the layout of the road, and speed is what causes damage to cars when going over speed bumps. He said it makes sense to him to install removable speed bumps for the summer months only, perhaps June, July, and August, or from Memorial Day to Labor Day.

"To me, it's something worth considering," Sullivan said.

Bonetti pointed out, cars turning onto the street are immediately faced with a rise in the grade of the road, and should be driving slowly as there is no way to see what is over the top of the hill from the bottom. He said cars entering from the right off Border Street have to slow down due to the curve of the road's entrance, and it shouldn't be a problem to keep speed down as cars continue up the road.

"We're asking the board to consider, and we'll be glad to pay for, speed bumps."

— Russ Bonetti, Parker Avenue

Installing speed bumps for Parker Avenue has been considered before, and Bonetti said the first time around, he had been against it. Now, seeing the dangers on his street, he has changed his mind.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said he sympathizes with the issue Parker Avenue residents are facing, and said speeding is a major problem all over town which needs to be addressed. However, he said he hates to think of installing speed bumps on any public way. He suggested involving the police department by having an officer patrol the area on a constant basis, issuing tickets for those speeding when necessary.

However, Bonetti and Pattison said there has been a police presence on their street before at their request, but there is only so much an officer can do. There is no rhyme or reason to when speeding cars travel their road, and it becomes a matter of catching people in the act.

Sullivan asked whether the department has a traffic monitoring device that can pinpoint the speed of a car as it travels down the street, and provides a readout for motorists, allowing them to see their speed and how fast they should have been going. If traveling too fast, lights flash, similar to those found atop a police cruiser. Griffin said the department is working toward obtaining one.

Sullivan said it might be worth asking the department to send an officer up there again. He suggested an officer use one of the department's motorcycles to stake out the area with a radar gun and clock people as they travel up the street. He said issuing tickets could help control the problem.

"You could find any number of people who would let (the police) use their driveways," to track speed, said Bonetti

Griffin said he would be happy to gather some new information about speed bumps for the board, but cautioned he does not necessarily think installing them is in the town's best interest.

"Motorcycles go airborne with speed bumps," he said, at minimal speeds of 30 or 35 mph, not to mention the other potential problems that can arise. "I just want you to be aware."

Town Manager Bill Griffin will bring back information to the board on the effectiveness of speed bumps at an upcoming meeting. For more information, please contact Griffin at the selectmen's office, at (781) 383-4105.

Mill River developers to submit revised plans

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Developers will be submitting a "limited site plan" to make changes to the "Motif #1" building at the Mill River Boatyard, which is owned by brothers, Stephen and Peter Roy of Cohasset.

Building inspector Bob Egan said he has spoken with the Roys' developers who received revised plans for the structure Aug. 11. They are currently preparing to submit a filing to the planning board.

The planning board has been concerned that construction was continuing even though a cease-and-desist order was issued for the site. The owners had not come before the board for a site plan review prior to construction, and therefore, the board asked Egan order all work stop on the project.

The board met with the Roys' attorney Charles Humphreys in July and at that time said construction would be allowed on the site but only to make the building safe. It said owners would have to come back before the board for the site plan review before further construction would be allowed.

Town Counsel has backed up the planning board's opinion regarding the construction.

Town Counsel Rich Hucksam said in his opinion, "Site plan approval is required where a building or structure with a total gross floor area of more than 200 square feet...is removed and reconstructed with the same total gross floor area."

Revised plans for work on "Motif #1" at the Mill River Marine site will soon be before the planning board.

The town's bylaws state that construction, reconstruction, or expansion that exceeds a total gross floor area of 200 square feet requires a permit to build from the building inspector, but that he must not issue the permit, "Until he shall have received from the planning board a written statement of final approval."

But last month Humphreys contested the planning board's opinion and said the building is only undergoing repairs, not a reconstruction, and therefore the planning board has no jurisdiction.

Humphreys could not be reached for comment this week.

The planning board is not scheduled to meet again until September. For more information, please call the planning board office at (781) 383-3517.

Trees honor Sladen and Winters

Constitution Park will always hold the memories of two of the town's most knowledgeable mariners.

Two Japanese dogwood trees have been planted side by side to honor the late Sheldon Sladen and John "Moose" Winters. The two were very good friends, and both were experienced lobstermen. Sladen was married to Winters' cousin Nancy Tower, so the two men had a very close connection. Both were lobstermen, and Winters also served as the town's harbormaster for eight years.

Jim Campbell was friends with the men and coordinated the planting of the trees. He said Sladen's tree was planted when he passed away a few years back, and it only seemed fitting to bestow the same honor on his friend. The two men used to look to each other for support in life, and Campbell said it is nice to see their memorials standing side by side.

Campbell said the memorial was made possible with the help of Peter Laugelle and Al Meallo, as well as Bernard's restaurant, who very generously allowed Campbell to use its hose to water the newly planted tree.

Another 'traffic buddy' goes missing in Cohasset

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

ANOTHER MISSING BUDDY

OK Cohasset, this has to stop. I have had more response to the piece that was in the column several weeks ago about a "Missing Buddy" and now have another story to share with all.

Another local family went up to Joseph's Hardware and bought a green Go Slow guy. The young man in this family (almost 2 years old) was so attached to him that he carried him around the house for 2 days and even wanted him to sleep in his bedroom with him. When the little green guy was finally put out to do the job of protecting the families children from the cars that go very fast past their house, the little two-year-old kept waving to him out the window all day.

Well, when the family got up the next morning and went to the window to see the green guy, he was GONE, one night out and it was gone. The little girl in this family could not understand why anyone would do that as she cannot comprehend people taking things from other people's homes that don't belong to them. It was so sad because it really bothered her and it raised a lot of questions about her safety on our house etc.....what a sad turn of events. So there are two Buddys out there without a home. This family have since bought another "friend" but have kept it in the house we are afraid to put it out.

The family referenced in the piece above asked to be anonymous as they were afraid of any retaliation towards them. Please do the right thing if anyone knows who is doing this, let the Cohasset Police Department know.

PAN-MASS CHALLENGE

Pete Vitello road in the Pan Mass Challenge for his sixth year riding the 197-mile bike ride from Sturbridge to Provincetown. He rides with his two brothers and his sister. They have raise almost $15,000 this year and donations are still coming in. Also his parents (Mae and Joe Vitello) volunteer at Mass Maritime to help feed and support the riders. Pete rides in honor or in memory of more than 50 people given to him by contributors (he carries the names with him on the ride). He also rides in honor of his mother, Mae Vitello, a two-time cancer survivor and his father in-law, Robert Goyette, who passed away from cancer seven years ago. His three biggest fans Amanda 6, Peter 2, and his wife, Jacqui Goyette-Vitello were waiting in Provincetown at the finish line for him. This has become such a wonderful family and friend event for the Vitello Family and who knows, soon Jacqui may ride! Fantastic piece to write about, congratulations.

BLUE SHIELD VOLUNTEER

FAMILY RUNNERS

Three members of the Riley family of Jerusalem Road competed in the annual seven-mile Falmouth Road Race, in the heat and humidity of Sunday, Aug. 14: Bob Riley, 75; Brian Riley, CHS class of 1996; and Cameron Riley, grandson and member of the Holderness School class of 2007. Well done!

GIRLS HOOP STARS

Hats off to some of Cohasset's girls basketball players who attended the Sarah Behn Basketball Overnight Camp at Wheaton College last week. There were approximately 400 girls from several different states who attended this camp and some of our girls received premier awards for their achievements. Carly Salerno received two awards: one for winning the 3 on 3 competition for her team and another for winning Most Improved Player for her age group division. Kayla Farren received one award for winning the Hot Shots competition for her age group division and Anna Seraikas received the Hustle Award for her age group division. Only one award for these categories was given out for the various age group divisions. In addition, Olivia Franklin and Whitney Jaffe both received Camper for the Day awards. Congratulations, girls.

OK, that is all for this week. If you have any news or information for next week's column, please get me all of your info by noon on Tuesday. EMAIL: aroundtowncohasset@yahoo.com FAX: 781-383-2241

Vintage T-shirt on eBay

Dates back to 1988 road race

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Virtually anything can be purchased on eBay. That includes a vintage Cohasset Road Race By-the-Sea T-shirt circa 1988.

But surprisingly enough, the shirt, which was up for bidding on the online auction site until Wednesday morning, isn't being sold by someone local who may have stuffed it in a drawer since participating in the race. It's being sold by a Jesse Girard of Toronto, Canada.

Ronnie Goodwin of Goodwin Graphics, also a longtime member of the Cohasset Rotary Club which sponsors the race, has been printing shirts for the race for more than 20 years. He said he received a call from a friend who saw the shirt while looking for Cohasset items on eBay.

Goodwin was surprised to see his shirt, especially for sale by someone in Toronto, and said his friend joked that now, Goodwin has "Made it to the big time."

Goodwin said he remembers designing the shirt, but couldn't remember when he printed it. The shirt is "Cohasset" blue with white lettering and features a logo which says, "Cohasset Road Race By-the-Sea" on the front with a depiction of Minot Light. On the back, it says Cohasset Liquors with a champagne bottle exploding.

The front of the T-shirt.

The back says Cohasset Liquors with a champagne bottle exploding.

Goodwin explained the shirt was designed for Cohasset Liquors, which had been a sponsor for the Road Race that year. He said businesses used to receive a number of T-shirts for sponsoring the Road Race which had only their logo. Today, everyone receives the same T-shirt and all sponsors logos are printed on the back.

But Cohasset Liquors, then located in an old building at the site where the Pilgrim Cooperative bank now stands on Rte. 3, was sold more than 15 years ago. It has since merged with Curtis Liquors, located in Tedeschi Plaza.

In addition, looking back into his records which date back to 1991, Goodwin said he did not print any blue T-shirts during that time period, which means the shirt on eBay is at least 14 years old.

Just how the T-shirt made its way across the border is anyone's guess.

Girard said the only history he has on the item is the fact that he bought it as part of a bulk T-shirt purchase.

"Toronto is the biggest market for vintage ware 'recycling,' and I myself have a store operation by virtue of my ability to purchase multiple amounts of everything relating to the days gone by, whether it's shoes or jeans, dresses or hats, leathers or jackets," he said. "Basically, my bulk purchasing comes from wholesale warehouses scattered on the outskirts of the city, as well as a few private suppliers and the odd donation. I scour everything personally by hand (or sometimes with a hired helper) to pick the cream from the mostly tired piles."

Goodwin said he keeps the positives of all the shirts he prints, which are essentially the patterns for printing the shirts. He still has the positive for the champagne bottle shirt.

"If the shirt goes for big bucks, we can start printing them tomorrow," he joked.

At the close of the auction, the shirt went to the highest bidder for $20.50.

Other Cohasset eBay items

The Cohasset Road Race T-shirt isn't the only Cohasset item for sale on eBay. A quick search turns up roughly 17 items including:

- Bidding on a Cohasset marriage certificate which dates back to June, 1865, ended Thursday. At the time the Mariner went to press, the bid price had reached more than $20. The bride and groom are listed as Mary E. Ewell, 18 years old, and George W. Wilson, 28 years old. The seller is from Brunswick, Maine.
- Also for sale by a Scituate resident is a pewter Cohasset Sailing Club trophy from 1935. The engraving says, "Saturday series Cape Cod Knockabouts, third prize." Bidding ended on the item Wednesday, and was up to $35.
- Bidding will end today on an 1862 Second Congregational Church Sabbath School hymnbook. Written in pencil at the beginning of the book are the words, "White Creek, May 20, 1898. Jennie Connell's book." The seller, who is from California, says in the item description Jennie Connell was Mrs. James Sr. McMahan's young sister who died. The book then belonged to Eliveth McMahan, followed by Jennie McMahan Davis. At the time the Mariner went to press, bidding had reached $9.99.
- Believe it or not, there is even a Cohasset home for sale on eBay, due in large part to its famous history. The home, located at 28 Otis Ave., was featured in the 1987 film "The Witches of Eastwick," with Michelle Pfeiffer and Jack Nicholson. The item description states, "Jack Nicholson cried on this front porch."

The home is a renovated 1900 Victorian, and is located on 3.9 acres. The house is being sold by Ayer Estates of Cohasset, and has a starting bid price of $2.1 million. Bidding will end Aug. 26.

NEWCOMERS CLUB

Local author - The Newcomers club is celebrating local author, Claire Cook, by reading her novel "Multiple Choice". OPINION

EDITORIAL

When lightning strikes

Thousands of lightning bolts hit the area during Sunday's storm. In neighboring Hingham, which experienced a microburst, at least 20 homes were struck by lightning causing two fires. At Black Rock Country Club off Ward Street, a lightning detection device similar to the ones used at airports, recorded 1,200 lightning strikes in a three-mile radius.

Two people in Hingham were knocked off their feet when a bolt struck nearby.

During the height of the storm, at the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square, we saw a little girl dancing in the rain near the community center on South Street. She was totally unaware of the danger.

The following is provided by the National Weather Service:

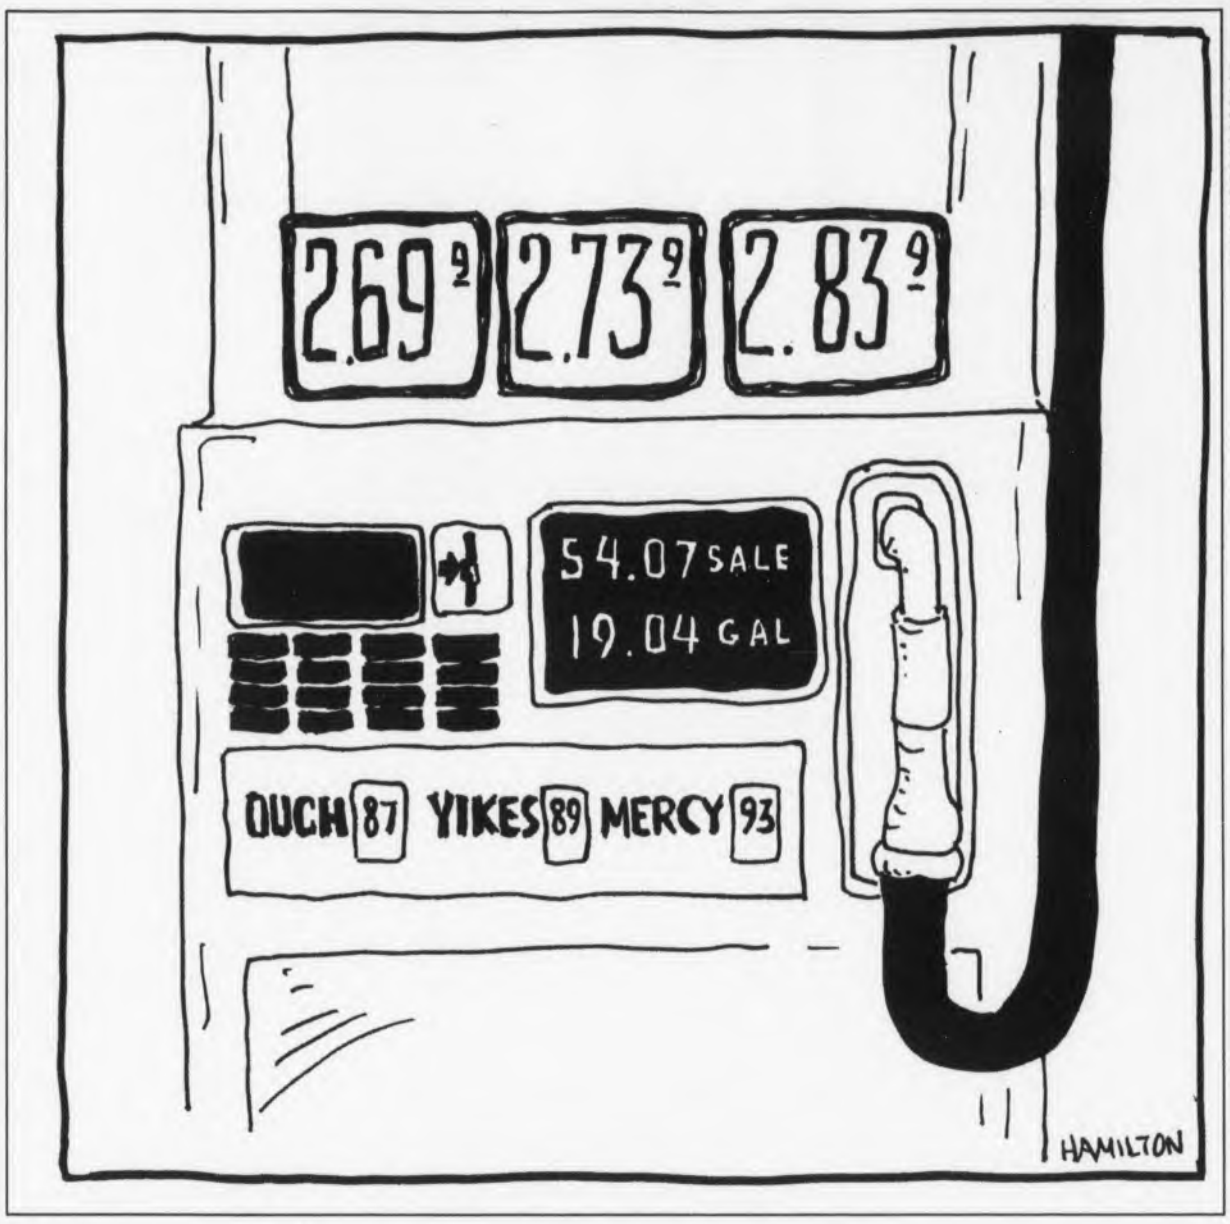
• In the United States, there are an estimated 25 million cloud-to-ground lightning flashes each year. During the past 30 years, lightning killed an average of 67 people per year in the United States based on documented cases. This is more than the average of 65 deaths per year caused by tornadoes and the average of 16 deaths per year caused by hurricanes. While documented lightning injuries in the United States average about 300 per year, undocumented injuries caused by lightning are likely much higher.

• Few people really understand the dangers of lightning. Many people don't act promptly to protect their lives, property and the lives of others because they don't understand all the dangers associated with thunderstorms and lightning. The first step in solving this problem is to educate people so that they become aware of the behavior that puts them at risk of being struck by lightning, and to let them know what they can do to reduce that risk. Coaches and other adults who make decisions affecting the safety of children must understand the dangers of lightning.

• Thunderstorms are most likely to develop on warm summer days and go through various stages of growth, development and dissipation. On a sunny day, as the sun heats the air, pockets of warmer air start to rise in the atmosphere. When this air reaches a certain level in the atmosphere, cumulus clouds start to form. Continued heating can cause these clouds to grow vertically upward in the atmosphere into "towering cumulus" clouds. These towering cumulus may be one of the first indications of a developing thunderstorm.

• During a thunderstorm, each flash of cloud-to-ground lightning is a potential killer. The determining factor on whether a particular flash could be deadly depends on whether a person is in the path of the lightning discharge. In addition to the visible flash that travels through the air, the current associated with the lightning discharge travels along the ground. Although some victims are struck directly by the main lightning stroke, many victims are struck as the current moves in and along the ground. While virtually all people take some protective actions during the most dangerous part of thunderstorms, many leave themselves vulnerable to being struck by lightning as thunderstorms approach, depart, or are nearby.

• Lightning can strike as far as 10 miles away from the rain area in a thunderstorm. That's about the distance you can hear thunder. When a storm is 10 miles away, it may even be difficult to tell a storm is coming.



The first stroke of lightning is just as deadly as the last. If the sky looks threatening, take shelter before hearing thunder.

• Use the 30-30 rule where visibility is good and there is nothing obstructing your view of the thunderstorm. When you see lightning, count the time until you hear thunder. If that time is 30 seconds or less, the thunderstorm is within 6 miles of you and is dangerous. Seek shelter immediately. The threat of lightning continues for much longer period than most people realize. Wait at least 30 minutes after the last clap of thunder before leaving shelter. Don't be fooled by sunshine or blue sky!

• Most lightning deaths and injuries in the United States occur during the summer months when the combination of lightning and outdoor summertime activities reaches a peak. During the summer, people take advantage of the warm weather to enjoy a multitude of outdoor recreational activities. Unfortunately, those outdoor recreational activities can put them at greater risk of being struck by lightning. People involved in activities such as boating, swimming, fishing, bicycling, golfing, jogging, walking, hiking, camping, or working out of doors all need to take the appropriate actions in a timely manner when thunderstorms approach. Where organized sports activities take place, coaches, umpires, referees, or camp counselors must protect the safety of the participants by stopping the activities sooner, so that the participants and spectators can get to a safe place before the lightning threat becomes significant. To reduce the threat of death or injury, those in charge of organized outdoor activities should develop and follow a plan to keep participants and spectators safe from lightning.

• Inside homes, people must also avoid activities which put their lives at risk from a possible lightning strike. As with the outdoor activities, these activities should be avoided before, during, and after storms. In particular, people should stay away from windows and doors and avoid contact with anything that conducts electricity. People may also want to take certain actions well before the storm to protect property within their homes, such as electronic equipment.

• If a person is struck by lightning, medical care may be needed immediately to save the person's life. Cardiac arrest and irregularities, burns, and nerve damage are common in cases where people are struck by lightning. However, with proper treatment, including CPR if necessary, most victims survive a lightning strike, although the long-term effects on their lives and the lives of family members can be devastating.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Great Egret not Snowy Egret

TO THE EDITOR:

Not to be picky, but I would like to point out that the handsome front page photograph titled "Avian Aviator" is not a photo of a snowy egret, as stated, but rather a photograph of a Great Egret. The Snowy Egret is only two feet in length and has yellow legs and feet, lacy tail feathers, a darker bill, and a plume of feathers at the nape of the neck. The Great Egret is over three feet in length; Its bill is yellow and legs are black. When it flies, its neck makes an "S" curve, as shown in the photograph.

Both Snowy Egrets and Great Egrets reside in our Cohasset tidal marshes and estuaries. Residents might enjoy identifying them when they have the opportunity of seeing either bird.

The enormity of inanity

TO THE EDITOR:

A "bewildered" writer in last week's Mariner decried "the enormity of inanity" of writing about hedges, when there are so many local, national and global issues that require our attention

Well, every day people tend their gardens or houseplants. They chatter about sports, their children, their pets, their aches and pains. They play golf and mess around in boats. They snooze, and they read novels. They go fishing. They recirculate jokes and questionable information on the internet. Humans are capable of a broad spectrum of interests, from personal to global.

In a recent survey, 9 out of 10 admitted to not having given a thought for hours to local, national or global issues (the 10th didn't answer the door, but I could hear the game on the TV).

So the magnitude of the inanity (of inattention to the big issues) is enormous, and we should be thankful our bewildered correspondent is worrying about it, instead of maundering about hedges and equally unimportant stuff. Somebody has to keep us focused!

HEALTH NOTES

Bacteria counts too high at Bassing Beach

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

For some time, the Board of Health has had to close Bassing Beach to swimming because of high bacteria readings. In fact the beach is now closed. When swimming is inadvisable, the Board of Health notifies the harbormaster, the yacht club, and the sailing club and a yellow flag is flown at the three sites. According to State regulations, the Town is required to post a warning as shown.

At the last Board of Health meeting, Jim Drysdale, chairman of the State of the Cohasset Harbor Health Study Committee, discussed some of his findings. Jim is a scientist in genetics and has the ability to obtain data on bacteria levels from water samples. He has taken data from sites near Bassing Beach and found the fecal coliform readings to be greater than 1,000. Swimming is banned at greater than 300. Enterococci, an indicator of bacteria human origin of was greater than 300. He further requested that the board post signs containing State required warnings. We explained that the signs were posted as required, but were stolen within a few ours of posting. Since the signs cost $80 apiece, we opted for yellow flags, notification of the harbormaster, the yacht club steward, and the president of the sailing club with notices on bulletin boards at the three sites.

Since Jim's data is consistent with those taken by the Board of Health, and its location and high levels indicate a possible point source of pollution (an illegal effluent pipe into the harbor) Last Tuesday, Tara Tradd, Board of Health Administrator, met with John Muncey, harbormaster, who provided a boat to take samples at the mouth of the Parker Avenue cut (the creek which separates Government Island from the mainland) and took samples of water in an attempt to isolate the source. In addition, the Army Corps of Engineers is planning to investigate the situation because the channel into Bailey's Creek is being filled in by sand.

The next step will be to evaluate the data taken by the Board of Health and carry out a thorough examination of the entire cut with a view to determining the source of the effluent outfall if any. If a source of pollution is found, an attempt will be made to find the source and the perpetrator. The end point for an act of pollution is action by the State, involving fines and other penalties, cleanup, and other remedies.

The Board of Health welcomes the increased attention which Cohasset Cove is receiving. At the same time, it is necessary to have considerable data and a correct diagnosis of the problems before taking action. All of the state's waterways are receiving closer attention as awareness increases about the harmful effects of the products of development on our natural systems.

Steve Bobo is a long-time member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

LIBRARY CORNER

Summer reading ends — Students who have successfully completed their summer reading goal may come in and pick up their, "Going Places @ Your Library" backpacks. More than 360 students participated in the statewide summer reading program this year. Great job everyone.

Eyeglasses wanted — Unite For Sight is a non-profit organization that empowers communities worldwide to improve eye health and eliminate preventable blindness. Owen McDonnell, cousin of Cohasset's Henry Greentree, must collect 300-500 pairs of eyeglasses for children and adults prior to his Sept. 1, 2005, departure to a refugee camp in Ghana, Africa. Eyeglasses and sunglasses for adults or children may be dropped off in the box on the round table in the foyer of the library.

New pumphouse work to get under way

It was a hot day but with some cool news.

Weil water will soon be part of the mix for Cohasset municipal water customers thanks to a $600,000 project bringing the Ellms Meadow Wellfield back on line

The benefits include providing an alternate source of water for Cohasset. But also, the well water will blend with the treated pond water from Lily Pond improving the taste of town water, said Water Commission Chairman Glenn Pratt during Sunday's groundbreaking ceremony.

The wellfield was abandoned in 1995 when water department had been struggling with mechanical failure and failing well heads. In fact the pumping station dates back to 1897, with the pump converted from oil driven to electric power in 1909.

About the new pumping station:

- The new facility will draw groundwater from five new tubular wells installed in Ellms Meadow.
- The facility will have the ability to add chemicals such as chlorine.
- Improvements also include 450 linear feet of eight-inch water main along James Lane to permit water to be discharged to the existing distribution system on Cushing Road.
- The new pumping station will be covered with wood framing and a shingled roof.

Time to jump off the tipping bandwagon

WRITER'S BLOCK

JEFF CUTLER

Imagine walking into a store, purchasing an item for $2.50, handing the clerk $3 or $4 and telling her to keep the change. Sound normal?

It's a perfectly understandable scenario — and even an expected one — if you're buying a latte at Starbucks. But, it's not normal if you're buying the Sunday paper at Hennessey's or a gallon of milk at Stop & Shop.

We hang on tightly to our change when buying stamps at the post office or when getting photos printed at Nobles. And we don't throw tips at the guy who changes our oil, or at the woman who sells us clothing, or even at the staff at EMS who walks us through the complicated purchase of a kayak or backpack.

So, why are we so inclined to dump our "excess" change into a cup or basket at a local ice cream, coffee or snack shop? What makes pouring coffee, cutting hair, carrying luggage and driving a taxi tippable offenses?

Perhaps it's the perception that these are "lesser" jobs or that they take more effort than ordinary occupations, but I think the perception has gone too far. When weighed against the costs of certain services, tipping is just plain inane.

It's just my opinion, but when a person pays $100 to get their hair colored and permed, they shouldn't have to tack on a hefty tip. They just paid for the service, didn't they? I don't begrudge the salon for being able to charge a ransom for turning someone's hair blue. I do wonder where they came up with the audacity to expect extra cash for a job done correctly.

The same holds true for any service. I expect to get the correct coffee when I order it, no tip needed. And when I hire a taxi, I expect to be dropped off at the right location. What's so hard to understand?

Further, even if the ice cream counter staff is saving for college, what are we supposed to do for the untipped cashier at the Fruit Center? Think of the untipped masses in dozens of jobs that are late to the tipping table. How will they survive?

Even worse than our tipping mania is the psychological strain inflicted upon our community. Society has become so locked into the mindset that tips are required, that "bad" tipping carries with it a real social stigma. I'm worried that if I stiff the barber after a haircut, I might get scissors in my ear on my next visit. And I share with hundreds of diners the very real fear of a waiter or waitress spitting in my food if I leave less than 22percent at my next meal.

According to Tipping.org, "There is no right or wrong when it comes to tipping, just commonsense. Also note that tipping is an option, not a must."

How did this guilt-wrenching, cash-sucking process begin? Many sources (including Webster's Dictionary) say that TIP is the acronym of To Insure Proper or Prompt service. And some people feel that tipping used to be done before service was given. That way the bad tippers got bad service and vice versa.

A study by a U.C. Berkeley professor says that tip money was left behind at the bar to allow the bartender the chance to have a drink as all his patrons had done all night...another way guilt plays a role in forcing up to tip. Think of the poor, thirsty bartender.

According to an unnamed employee at Hingham's Brewed Awakenings, tips can add a dollar per hour to her wages. In one shift, the tip baskets on their counters can grow to hold $40 or more. This money is then split between employees on each shift, making coffee shop work more lucrative than working at the local CVS.

I believe the proliferation of tipping is just another way that mob mentality has pressured us into behaving contrary to our natural instincts. I'm tired of giving my extra dollars to people who are being paid the same wage I make to do their specific job. I have yet to get a tip for writing a newspaper article or for penning a screenplay for a client.

Essentially, my irritation is with the illogical tippees, so the one area where I will continue to tip is at restaurants. Servers depend on tips for their livelihood because the food industry keeps its workers mired in $2/hour jobs for some reason.

Wes Baltzer is the General Manager of Stars on Hingham Harbor and has been in the foodservice industry for more than a decade. He says that tipping is a necessity in foodservice, but is open to every person's judgment in other environs.

"I feel that tipping at other establishments (such as gas stations, coffee shops, etc.) should be a customer's prerogative, but should by no means be expected or the norm," said Baltzer. "These workers earn a higher hourly wage [than foodservice staff] and many have benefits."

Baltzer also says that tips level the playing field in foodservice and the most skilled servers survive because they have the ultimate responsibility in creating a good payday.

"Serving takes skill, effort and commitment," he said. "Anything else is unacceptable. Perform at a mediocre level and you should expect a lower tip. Perform at an exceptional level and expect to have an easier time making rent and paying the rest of your bills."

Well, until I see some exceptional coffee pouring and some superb ice cream cone crafting, I'm leaving the baskets empty. I don't want to sneer at the cup that says, "College Fund" on it, but if the future collegian behind the counter is pulling down 10 bucks an hour to twist a soft-serve cone, I'm keeping the tip in my pocket to pay my own rent.

Reagan's legacy craze

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

They just won't let poor Ronnie Reagan rest in peace, will they?

I mean the organization called "the Ronald Reagan Legacy Project," which appears to be dedicated to the proposition that all things nailed down or not in the USA should in some way be renamed to honor our 40th president.

After that, could sainthood be far behind?

Right now, the top item on the agenda of the Legacy folks seems to be replacing Alexander Hamilton's face with Ronnie's on the $10 bill. After all, what did Alex do but lose a duel and you know what we think of losers.

The Legacy Project is also operating on the state level to the extent of preparing a sample resolution that members nationwide can send to their legislators to have Feb. 6 (his birthday) recognized as Ronald Reagan Day.

The subject of Ronnie Reagan and his legacy came up the other day when I read that Cong. Henry Bonilla, a Texas Republican, has filed a bill in Congress to rename 16th Street NE in Washington, a major thoroughfare, for his political idol.

This despite the fact that Washington has never voted for Reagan and already has a federal building and an airport named for him and it would cost an estimated $1 million to change the signs and maps not to mention the inconvenience of the residents.

Washington Mayor Anthony Williams, a Democrat, of course, suggested that, if Bonilla was so hot to honor Reagan maybe he should name a street in Texas for him and the suggestion drove me to the web site of the Ronald Reagan Legacy Project.

There are presently, by the Legacy's count, 74 dedications to Reagan: 68 in the United States and six overseas, including four highways or portions of highways in Texas, two of which don't go into effect until Sept. 1.

They range from a nuclear-powered aircraft carrier, the USS Ronald Reagan, to the Ronald Reagan Memorial Highway, a 70-mile stretch of Interstate 65 between Decatur and Birmingham, Ala. There's also a Ronald Reagan Memorial Boulevard in Alabama.

Overseas, Poland has the Rondo Ronalda Reagana (Ronald Reagan Circle) in Tarnow, connecting John Paul II Street with a street that leads to the Church of Blessed Caroline. Ireland has The Ronald Reagan-Main Street in Ballyporeen, County Tipperary.

And Grenada. You remember Grenada, don't you. That's where Ronnie sent in the troops to rescue a passel of medical school dropouts from the clutches the Cuban construction workers. Grenada has set up the Ronald Reagan Scholarship Fund to send Grenadan students to the US.

Eureka College, where Ronnie went to school, has a Reagan Physical Education Center, a Ronald W. Reagan Exhibit, a Ronald W. Reagan Leadership Program and a Ronald Reagan Peace Garden, while the town of Eureka, Ill., has Reagan Drive along the edge of Eureka College.

There's already a museum and gift shop at 111 South Main St., Tampico, Ill., where he was born, and at 816 South Hennepin Ave., Dixon, Ill., where he spent his teen years and an historical marker in Des Moines, Iowa, where he lived as a sportscaster.

And if that's not enough, House Speaker Dennis Hastert, an Illinois Republican, has filed a bill to establish the Ronald Reagan Boyhood Home National Historic Site.

Has the thought occurred to anyone — enough already?

Auto insurance rate reform is on the radar screen

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The emergence of auto insurance rates as a major story brought the state's major political players forward, and their political agendas into focus.

The auto insurers filed a request for a .1 percent decrease in rates for 2006, the first time anyone – including the insurers, by their own admission – can remember the industry asking for a reduction in rates.

The request for a decrease had already been leaked to the Boston Globe, which quoted Attorney General Thomas Reilly as reacting: "Drivers deserve a rate reduction that is far more significant. If that's the number, that's not going to fly. It's not going to hold up." Reilly's office represents consumers in the annual auto-rate setting process, a position delightful for any politician looking for ways to sally in battle on behalf of beleaguered consumers. It did not go unremarked upon that the proposal for a decrease could well be a gambit to make those consumers feel somewhat less beleaguered — and perhaps dampen some of the momentum developing on Beacon Hill for far-reaching auto insurance reform. Daniel Johnston of the Automobile Insurers Bureau of Massachusetts belittled that interpretation, saying the filing was due to a drop in claims, not an increase in reform fever. "This has nothing to do with that," Johnston said. "We're just the scorekeeper. Our decision was made based on the facts as we see them."

Reilly's reaction is just one measure of how attractive the issue is to politicians here, who've seen politicians in states such as New Jersey go far on the promise, and occasionally the reality, of auto insurance reform.

Thus, Gov. Mitt Romney put the issue on the agenda long ago, when observers weren't particularly looking for it, and when his run for president was a "maybe" and not a "probably." In those days, way back in — well actually, it was this January, but a long time ago politically — the governor seemed to have a promising issue with which to generate a success story as the Commonwealth's CEO. He still needs such a success, though he may well apply it to his résumé in the Republican presidential primaries. And the good will attendant on a perceived success in auto insurance would absolutely redound to Kerry Healey, who's attempting to win friends at a furious rate as she travels from Pittsfield from Provincetown, positioning herself for 2006 if Romney validates the conventional wisdom and seeks the presidency.

One thing's sure: if either Republican is going to claim credit for progress on auto insurance, it's going to be shared credit, because nothing's going to get done unless the Democrats are willing. But judging from Senate President Robert Travaglini's reaction, they are. Travaglini told the News Service in an interview that auto insurance, along with health care and an economic stimulus package, are at the top of the Senate's fall action list.

Still, fall would just be the beginning, and it's hard to imagine Romney's plan, which Boston's leaders are on record as officially hating, making it back to his desk in anywhere near the form he filed. Particularly once Travaglini of East Boston and House Speaker Salvatore DiMasi of the North End are done with it.

A side note to all this insurance talk: If Healey really wanted to make a splash on an issue she could call her own, she might take a shot at a homeowner's insurance reform proposal. Especially on the Republican-leaning Cape, but also in the kind of bedroom communities statewide where gubernatorial elections are decided, the cost of home insurance is skyrocketing in a way auto insurance hasn't for years. If Healey became the first person to catch people's eye on this topic, she'd do a lot to solve her biggest political problem for the time being: name recognition.

• Bad week for governor's nominees to juvenile court — The governor's choice for Hampden District Court withdrew his name from consideration after it became clear he probably didn't have support on the Governor's Council for confirmation. Henry Rigali had faced questions about his temperament and scathing testimony from a Springfield man released from prison after serving time in a case Rigali had prosecuted. His withdrawal came a day after the governor's office said it was putting on hold the nomination of another Juvenile Court nominee, this one for Suffolk County. Ugly details of Renee Dupuis' divorce and custody battle hit the front page of the Boston Herald over the weekend, and the governor said the claims of her ex-husband will now be investigated by the Judicial Nominating Commission.

• Romney names new head of immigration office, welcomes influx — The governor named Pierre Imbert, who came to America as a refugee from Haiti 22 years ago, as the new head of the state Office for Refugees and Immigrants, and said the kind of people the office supports are vital to the future of Massachusetts. Brushing aside concerns about illegal immigration – "I think it's relative to some other states. It's not a major problem of the same scale in our state," the governor said – Romney told reporters he welcomes the arrival of new residents from foreign lands, without which the state's population would be declining steadily.

• Reilly says he'll pursue concrete supplier for big dig — Aggregate Industries, which provided 60 percent of the concrete used in the Big Dig, had its office raided in June by state and federal authorities looking for evidence that the company reported substandard or old concrete as new. Attorney General Thomas Reilly said while the case in no way appears related to problems with leaks in the Central Artery, and structural integrity of the project is not an issue for now, he did find records pointing to a "scheme" in which Aggregate Industries allegedly submitted fraudulent documents indicating that below-standard concrete was acceptable.

$1.3 MILLION FOR HEAD START (H 4200)

House 154-0, Senate 37-0, override Gov. Romney's veto of $1.3 million for grants to Head Start programs that provide early education for children ages 3 to 5 years old. Override supporters said that the $1.3 million is important to adequately fund these successful programs that serve many high-risk, low-income families and their pre-school children. They noted that parental involvement is one of the keys to these programs that educate both the children and the parents. In his veto message, Romney said that he reduced the funding to the amount that is consistent with his original budget recommendation for this program. (A "Yes" vote is for the $1.3 million. A "No" vote is against the $1.3 million).

$330,000 FOR AFL-CIO (H 4200)

House 132-19, Senate 37-0, override Gov. Romney's $330,000 veto including $195,000 for three full-time rapid response labor specialists and $135,000 for incumbent worker coordinators at the Massachusetts AFL-CIO. Override supporters said that rapid response specialists help workers in plants that are closing and are about to lay off employees. They noted that the specialists organize the workers' reassignment, retraining or education to help them get quickly back into the workforce. In his veto message, Romney said that he eliminated funding for these programs because they were not recommended. (A "Yes" vote is for the $330,000. A "No" vote is against the $330,000).

$250,000 FOR TOXIC USE REDUCTION (H 4200)

House 148-4, Senate 38-0, override Gov. Romney's veto of $250,000 in funding for the University of Massachusetts' Toxic Use Reduction Institute (TURI) to assess the feasibility of adopting alternatives for toxic or hazardous substances including lead, formaldehyde and dioxins. The assessment would include a look at the use of the toxic substances by manufacturing companies and how the use of alternatives would affect the finances of the companies and the state's environmental health. TURI would report its finding to the Legislature by July 1, 2006. Override supporters said that it is important to look at alternatives to these dangerous substances. They noted that the assessment would be a fair and balanced one that would include the effects of the use of alternatives on the environment as well as on businesses, jobs and the economy. In his veto message, the governor said that he vetoed the funding because it is not consistent with his original budget recommendation. The House last year overrode Romney's veto of this $250,000 but the veto was sustained because the Senate did not act on it. (A "Yes" vote is for the $250,000. A "No" vote is against the $250,000).

ALSO UPON BEACON HILL

DISCLOSE RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS' FINANCES (S 1074)- The Judiciary Committee heard testimony on legislation that would require churches and other non-profit religious organizations to file an annual financial report with the Attorney General's office. Under current law, religious organizations are exempt from this requirement but some 30,000 other non-secular, non-profit organizations are required to file the report. The bill also requires all secular and non-secular organizations to list their real estate assets in the report. Supporters testified that these disclosures would inform donors how their money is spent and remove this exemption that has cast a shroud of secrecy around religious organizations. They noted that this exemption aided the Catholic Church in covering up the sexual abuse of children by allowing it to secretly pay hush money to victims of sexual abuse and even sell property to fund the hush money. Opponents said that the bill is clearly a violation of the separation of church and state. They argued that the bill is an outrageous and unnecessary one that is anti-Catholic and is solely aimed at the Catholic Church.

WITNESS INTIMIDATION AND PROTECTION (H 28 and H 29)- The Judiciary Committee heard testimony on Gov. Mitt Romney's bills to prevent witness intimidation and provide witness protection in Massachusetts. The measures impose new penalties on anyone who engages in witness intimidation or harassment and establish a Witness Protection Commission to oversee the state's witness protection programs. Lt. Governor Kerry Healey and Suffolk County District Attorney Daniel Conley urged quick action on the proposals that would crack down on crime and violence in the state. Another provision allows courts to require abusers who violate restraining orders to wear Global Positioning System (GPS) monitoring bracelets as a condition of their probation. The bracelets would alert the victim and law enforcement officials if the abuser attempts to enter the victim's home or workplace.

GAY MARRIAGE (H 3190)- Senate President Robert Travaglini (D-East Boston) announced that the constitutional convention scheduled for August 24 would be a "formality" that would not act on any proposals. He noted that many legislators are on vacation and that the convention will convene and then quickly recess to a later date. The agenda for the convention includes the proposed constitutional amendment that bans same-sex marriage but gives same-sex couples the right to form civil unions with all the same benefits, protections, rights and responsibilities granted to couples who are married. The proposal was approved by the convention last year and needs the approval of this year's convention in order to go on the 2006 ballot.

LIFETIME PAROLE FOR SOME SEX OFFEDNERS (S 1808)- The Judiciary Committee held a hearing on legislation that would require lifetime parole for sex offenders who fail to register with the state's sex offender registry. The lifetime parole would be in addition to the penalties under current laws that include a minimum six-month prison sentence for first offenders and a five-year one for second offenders. The bill also increases from $50 to $75 the current monthly "parole fee" imposed on all criminals while they are on supervised parole in Massachusetts.

George's (McGoldrick) from the start," said Spofford. However, he said after learning the proposed Cedarmere development — for which clearing for construction has already begun on the 41-acre former Hayes Estate — will no longer be providing affordable rental units, he felt a project which would fulfill that need should be selected. Therefore, he awarded the most points to Cohasset Associates.

"We need affordable rentals," he said, adding that was the intent of the Town Meeting vote which allowed the town to move forward with the purchase of the Cook property.

Spofford added he has spoken to many seniors in the community and "Some people are tired of the roller coaster ride of taxes. They want to get out from under it." Rental property is a way to make that happen, he said.

In addition, Spofford said by choosing Deer Hill over Cohasset Associates, the town will miss out on an extra $250,000, which could have been put in the reserve fund. Cohasset Associates bid $5.15 million and Deer Hill bid $4.9 million.

"I think we as a board have missed an incredible opportunity," said Spofford, by not going with a project that will provide more rental units for seniors, but added on the flip side, he thinks McGoldrick is a terrific developer, "and I know George will do a good job."

Selectman Michael Sullivan said he also had a difficult time making a decision as he too recently found out the Cedarmere development will not have a rental component. However, he said he believes Deer Hill Partners had a creative approach with its single units, and many different price points for ownership housing.

Sullivan said with affordable ownership condominiums priced at roughly $150,000, "It provides an opportunity for those who fit into that category." He said paying a mortgage for a condominium of that price range could be less expensive than renting every month.

He said to then have units priced in the $400,000 range, "No other project touched that point of the market."

Sullivan also said he felt the project fits best with the piece of land it will be built on. "This is what I think people will ultimately want," he said.

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed also said he was impressed with the range of affordability, and said he liked the fact that the main building of the Deer Hill development, which would house the affordable units, will be built to take advantage of the best views. "It does fit in best with the land," he said.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said as he went through the criteria for developer selection, he had his own vision for the aspects of the proposal that would be most important to the town. He said he paid close attention to:

- an artistic and compelling vision
- a good range of moderately priced housing
- open space and privacy
- experience working with communities
- the ability to get through the permitting process with town boards
- minimal negative impacts

Dormitzer said his bottom line numbers were surprisingly close, but in the end, his numbers indicated in his view, Deer Hill Partners would be the best choice for the town.

Selectman Gary Vanderweil said he liked the Deer Hill Partners project the best due to its reduced number of units, which would help preserve open space. While Cohasset Associates and Northland Residential both proposed building 65 units of housing, Deer Hill proposed building 56 units.

Vanderweil said he also liked the free standing, single cottage-style buildings in McGoldrick's development, as the other two proposals had duplexes or triplexes.

Price was also a high point for Vanderweil, who said the range of ownership pricing really impressed him. He said having an affordable ownership unit with a roughly $100,000 price tag, "Is an incredible stroke of brilliance."

"I think this is really going to strike a chord in Cohasset," he said.

The board now has 30 days to negotiate with the company, to come up with a mutually agreeable land disposition agreement, or LDA, which is similar to a purchase and sale agreement.

Public comment

Former selectman Ronnie McMorris, who was also on the senior housing committee, said she was concerned about not having rental units with the Deer Hill project. She said the reason the board of selectmen got involved in bringing senior housing to fruition on the Cook Estate was to ensure the town's needs are met. Seniors in town have designated rental housing as a top priority.

She said she was concerned that as a Local Initiative Program project, or LIP project, there will be certain criteria imposed on the affordable units by the state that will preclude Cohasset residents from qualifying. LIP is the mechanism by which the state regulates certain types of affordable housing.

McMorris said the town's seniors are looking for ways to downsize. She said the purpose of building on the Cook land was to provide a place where people in their 70s and 80s could live in rental units, and "get rid of the headaches of home ownership." She said the project that has been approved could easily have been approved by the Cook heirs alone without town involvement, as it does not accomplish the goals the town set.

She said under the LIP guidelines, it is her understanding affordable ownership housing is restricted to seniors 62 and older, without assets of more than $50,000.

"How many Cohasset residents will qualify to buy an affordable unit?" under those guidelines, she asked. She said the criteria is different for rental units, as it only looks at income, and therefore, rental units would be more accessible for seniors.

However, Alan Perrault of Deer Hill Partners said under the LIP program, there is actually a cap of $150,000 in home equity on top of their other assets, which makes affordable home ownership very accessible for a variety of people. Perrault said he has extensive experience with the LIP guidelines, as he is in the process of building the Ridgewood Crossing 55-plus development in Hingham.

McGoldrick, who is building the Residences at Black Rock, said Deer Hill Partners' development meets a range of affordability, including the moderate level, which he believes more Cohasset residents will be able to take advantage of. He said the RFP specified a range of affordability, and that is what he presented.

But McMorris said if the test to allow seniors to qualify for affordable housing is based upon their assets, "Who in Cohasset will be served?"

Selectman Gary Vanderweil said to him, it sounded like McMorris was advocating for seniors who don't need affordable housing.

"If your point is, people are wealthier so they can't qualify, they shouldn't be going for affordable housing," he said.

No rentals at Cedarmere

The Cedarmere development, proposed for the 41-acre former Hayes Estate off Beechwood Street, will not be providing rental housing.

Planning board member Peter Pratt said as of right now, from what developers at Leggat McCall Properties has told both the Department of Housing and Community Development and the planning board, plans for the site include 31 for sale affordable and market rate condominiums to be located in the "Westerly House."

"The jury is still out on that," said Pratt of the development not including any rental units, as a final agreement between the board and the developer has not been signed.

"The planning board has to dig into this," said Pratt, adding it would be helpful if the board of selectmen would reinstate the Cohasset Housing Partnership, to get knowledgeable people working together to solve the town's housing needs.

SANDY BEACH ASSOCIATION

Summer Has Arrived!

The weather has been beautiful!
The lifeguards are on duty!
The beach is clean!

Sandy Beach won the South of Boston Regional Gold for "Best Beach" as voted by Mariner readers!

REGIONAL FAVORITE READERS CHOICE AWARDS 2005 GOLD

The Sandy Beach Association would like to thank all Cohasset residents and corporations/companies doing business in Cohasset who have contributed to this year's annual fundraising drive. This once-a-year mailing is our sole appeal for funds used to clean the beach, employ the lifeguards and beach maintenance workers, and maintain the bath house facility.
This year we would like to recognize every individual, family and business who contributed to this great cause.

On behalf of all Cohasset residents – we thank you!!!

Jake Previte leaves his mark on CHS lacrosse program

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

As a young child, Jake Previte's calling in the world of athletics came from the baseball diamond.

It wasn't until the fifth grade that Jake's brother, Paul (then an eighth grader) brought home a lacrosse stick for Jake to play around with.

Almost literally, he hasn't put it down since.

"The sport just came to me so quickly," Previte said from his home on Wednesday, lacrosse stick in hand (naturally). "Pretty soon, I realized that I had a lot more potential in this game than I did in baseball."

By the seventh grade, Previte had retired his baseball glove and was a rising star in the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program. By his own estimation, Previte was practicing for close to five hours a day, constantly working on his shooting, passing and stick-handling skills.

That takes a lot of love and passion for the sport, a trait that CYL Director Chuck Jaffe vividly recalls in Previte as a youth player.

"From my first moment coaching Jake, you couldn't beat the smile off his face with a stick," Jaffe says. "He never had an unhappy moment on the field. A kid like that is easy to coach."

Previte credits Jaffe and his brother for his development as a young player. Previte still has Jaffe's letter to youth players, titled "A lesson in who we are," telling them what makes a winning player and person.

"My brother followed it, and so did I," Jake says.

He and Paul got in a lot of practice in the spacious backyard of a neighbor, and Jake says he picked up a number of pointers in those sessions.

"I saw Paul doing his own thing, and I wanted to get as good as him," Jake says.

Paul, a Mariner All-Scholastic for lacrosse during his CHS days, is now a senior at Trinity College. He played the game his first two years there, but is now focusing on his studies as an economics and philosophy major.

Jake Previte

The oldest of three Previte children – Mary, who also plays lacrosse, will be a junior at CHS – Paul laughs when asked who the better player is between he and his brother.

"I'll give that to him," Paul says. "That's pretty tough for me to do. But as far as skills are concerned, at that age, he's 10 times ahead of where I was."

Those skills helped Jake break the Cohasset boys lacrosse career points record this past season, surpassing former record-holder Jamie Buick. Previte notched 257 points in his four-year career.

There was no doubt coming into this past season that Previte was the top dog in the Cohasset attack, and opposing defenses treated

Mackenzie Holway - Senior (Capt.) Midfield - Cohasset

Mackenzie Holway

Any time you talked to Cohasset coaches, it didn't take long for the subject of Holway's remarkable improvement this year to come up...One of the league's best two-way players this season from her midfield position...Started the season off right with three goals and an assist in season-opening win over Cape Cod Academy, a harbinger of things to come...Pilgrim Conference All-Star...Also played soccer for CHS, and was a Mariner All-Scholastic Honorable Mention last fall...Will attend UMass-Amherst...Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "Mackenzie was just phenomenal for us this year. She played so well defensively and offensively, and won so many possessions for us. Without her, we're not nearly as strong as we were."

Lauren Rizzotti - Senior (Capt.) Forward - Cohasset

Lauren Rizzotti

A gifted offensive player who led Cohasset in scoring the last two years, earning Mariner All-Scholastic honors both seasons...Finished this season with 53 goals and 14 assists, and ends her career at CHS with over 160 career points...Scored four goals in season opener against Cape Cod Academy ... Had three goals and an assist in tie against Falmouth in which the Skippers overcame a large deficit...Pilgrim Conference All-Star...All this despite being heavily marked by opposing defenses all year long...Will attend St. Michael's College in Vermont...Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "Lauren is one of the best players in this area, without a doubt. She could play for any team in the state."

Kaley Hewitt - Junior Forward - Braintree

After a solid sophomore season, had a breakout junior season, leading her team in scoring ...Played one of her best games in Braintree's 21-14 win at North Quincy on April 19, scoring a remarkable nine goals...A member of the gold medal winning team at last month's Bay State Games ...Plays club lacrosse for Mass Elite, where she was one of the team's top players at last month's National Galaxy Championship Tournament in Pennsylvania...Visited a few colleges while she was down there...Coaches youth lacrosse in the winter...Has played soccer at BHS, but says she might run cross-country this fall...Also did indoor track last winter...Will

Diving for the championship

Congratulations to the divers from the Cohasset Swim and Dive Team who won the South Shore Swim League Championship Diving Meet on Aug. 9 at Duxbury Yacht Club.

This is the second consecutive year Cohasset has won the Championship Meet. Representing the Cohasset team were eight divers who placed highest in their age group during the five regular season inter-league meets.

In the girls 12-and-under age group, team mates Jillian Crawford and Colby Smalzel outscored the competition to finish first and second, respectively, with total points of 88.95 and 84.95. Greg Berube placed second in the boys 12-and-under group with a total score of 79.75. Teammate Sean McKenna scored 52.1 to place fourth in the group.

In the girls 17-and-under age group, Carly Salerno finished second with a score of 107.75 and Betsy Crawford finished fourth with a score of 102.05. In the boys 17-and-under age group, Wes Medwid placed fifth with a score of 109.75 and Andy McKenna placed sixth with a score of 107.4.

All of the divers earned team points for Cohasset, assuring a victory against teams from the South Shore Diving Club, Duxbury Yacht Club, Scituate Knights of Columbus and Eel River Beach Club.

In the championship meet, divers in the 12-and-under age group were required to compete a total of four dives each, one each from three categories, forward, back, reverse, inward and twisting; and a fourth dive from any category. Divers in the 17-and-under age group were required to compete a total of five dives, one each from four categories and a fifth dive from any category.

Coaches Haley Wojtasinski and Charlotte Sida are extremely proud of their team. In addition to winning the championship meet, Cohasset also won three of the five regular season inter-league diving meets.

be a co-captian for next year's lacrosse team and is looking to play the sport in college, where she is considering studying physical therapy or nutrition

Margot Spatola -
Senior (Capt.)
Attack - Hingham

There's not much about this talented scorer that hasn't already been said…In her four-year career, Spatola was Hingham's go-to girl on offense…Tallied a team-leading 80 points on 59 goals, 21 assists this year, a total down a bit from seasons past but only because Spatola had more help up front this season…A three-time Pilgrim Conference All-star and two-time Eastern Mass. All-star benefited most from her blistering speed…She zipped through opposing defenses with her quick feet and always found herself in a position to unleash in front of the net…Sacrificed her own point total this season to take advantage of a Harborwomen offense that had many weapons…Tallied for her career…Played in the Eastern Mass. All-star contest before a Boston Cannons game this summer…Also captained the soccer team last fall and played basketball at HHS…Spatola will attend Boston College in the fall. Hingham coach Cory Ford: "Margot is quite a team player. She offered to play goal when our goalie got hurt and she knew when to go to goal and when to dish She made everyone around her look better because of her selflessness."

Danielle Russell -
Senior (Capt.)
Attack - Hingham

An Honorable Mention last season, Russell is making her first appearance on the Mariner All-Scholastic team…Was the second leading scorer on the Harborwomen squad, racking up 62 points on 48 goals, 14 assists as Hingham finished with an 11-7 regular season mark…Also very quick, Russell teamed with Spatola in creating one of the most potent attacks on the South Shore…When she drew the defender, she'd dish to Spatola, when Spatola drew the defender, she'd dish to Russell…Few opposing defenses stood a chance…A two-time Pilgrim Conference All-star, Russell was selected to play in the Eastern Mass. All-star game this summer before a Boston Cannons contest… Also captained the field hockey team in the fall…Russell will join Spatola at Boston College this fall. Hingham coach Cory Ford: "In losing her we lose a major shooter. Danielle is a very driven player and an excellent captain."

Molly Felt -
Senior (Capt.)
Attack - Marshfield

On an ever-growing team at Marshfield, Felt finished a solid career with the Lady Rams this past spring…While wins were few on the Marshfield squad this season (3-13-1), Felt was a standout as the leader on offense…As the go-to person, Felt was responsible for putting the ball in the net and she did so frequently, earning herself Pilgrim Conference All-star status for her efforts…Was the leading scorer on the squad, but was also an excellent leader, according to her coach…Was like a coach on the field, constantly counseling and guiding some of the squad's younger players during the games and off the field as well…She was one of the team's senior captains…Also a field hockey player at MHS, Felt plans to attend college in the fall. Marshfield coach Sue Collins: "Molly is a great team player. She knows where she has to be and tells everyone else where to be too. She's a nice kid who was always enthusiastic. She's a great kid to have on a team."

Carolyn Buckley -
Senior (Capt.)
Defense - Norwell

Concluded her high school athletic career with a stellar campaign, leading a Norwell defense that was among the best in the state…Played one of her best games in the state championship win over Winchester, as the North sectional champions never got into the flow on offense…Can guard and check with the best of them, with her work ethic being perhaps her biggest attribute…Pilgrim Conference All-Star…A three-sport athlete all four years at NHS, also playing field hockey and basketball…Was a co-captain in all three sports this season…An outstanding student, Buckley was the salutatorian for this year's graduating class and will attend Harvard University in the fall…Has been in contact with the lacrosse coach there, and is planning on going out for the team

Michelle Granara - Junior
Goalie - Norwell

Developed this year into arguably the league's best goalie…Credited by head coach Jen Kent for making the difference in Norwell's 14-11 sectional final win over Duxbury, making 15 saves that day, including a number of clutch stops in the second half to help the Clippers preserve their lead…Also played a very strong game against Winchester in the state championship…Has a knack for stopping penalty shots, even from the most talented of scorers, as she proved in the Duxbury win…Pilgrim Conference All-Star…Also a Patriot League All-Star for field hockey last fall…Plans on joining the swim team this winter…Younger sister of Frank Granara (Class of '04), also a multi-sport standout at NHS…Has played lacrosse since the second grade…Plays for the Mass Elite program, playing in several tournaments, including competitions this summer in Long Island and Maryland…Plans to play lacrosse in college, where she is interested in studying journalism

Caitlin Jackson -
Senior (Capt.)
Midfield - Norwell

Another in the long line of talented multi-sport athletes at Norwell High School…Had 59 goals and 44 assists this year…A great two-way player who also excelled defensively from her midfield position…Notched two goals and two assists in state championship win over Winchester…Played a career game in Norwell's 17-8 sectional semifinal win over Hopkinton, racking up six goals and three assists…Scored two goals in team's first game against Westwood on April 29…Pilgrim Conference All-Star…Also played soccer at Norwell, serving as one of the top sweepers in the area…National Honors Society member…Will attend Northwestern University, where she will play lacrosse for the defending Div. 1 national champions

Kathleen Kramer - Junior
Midfield - Norwell

Head coach Jen Kent said before the season Kramer could be in line for a breakout year, and was she ever right…Finished the season with over 60 goals and 100 points…One of three Norwell players (joining fellow All-Scholastics Lauren Strazzula and Taylor Murphy) to score five goals against Winchester in state championship victory…Had five goals and three assists in Norwell's 17-8 sectional semifinal win over Hopkinton…Notched three goals and four assists April 28 against Cohasset…One of the best passers on the team…Played for the gold medal winning lacrosse team at last month's Bay State Games…Currently running captains' practices for the cross-country team…Played field hockey her first two years at NHS, and also plays basketball…Hopes to play lacrosse in college, and has looked at a few schools in Virginia, including UVA (her father's alma mater)…Considering studying business in college

Taylor Murphy - Junior
Forward - Norwell

After a strong sophomore campaign, was even better this year with over 70 goals…Stepped up when it mattered most, scoring five goals each in Clippers' sectional title win over Duxbury and state championship victory over Winchester…Set the tone for her remarkable season with five goals and three assists in season opener against Marshfield…Lit up Cohasset on April 28 for career-high eight goals, one short of Norwell's school record…After playing in May's Women's National Lacrosse Championships in Pennsylvania, Murphy has played this summer for the Greater Boston Lacrosse Futures, participating in a number of tournaments…Also plays basketball for NHS, and is taking up field hockey for the first time this fall after playing JV soccer her first two years and cross-country as a junior…Works as a lifeguard in the summer and also coaches youth basketball in town…Would like to play lacrosse in college…Hoping to go to college in the Boston area, and has already visited Boston College and Tufts

Lauren Strazzula -
Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Norwell

Of all the shoes that the defending Div. 2 state champions will have to fill next year, these are perhaps the biggest…Led the team with 127 points (68 goals, 59 assists) despite constant double-teaming all year long…Able to beat multiple opponents and then finish the play with a deadly left-handed shot…Saved her best performance for last in Norwell's 19-8 state title win over Winchester, notching five goals and six assists while playing stellar defense…Scored team-high four goals in 11-10 loss to Duxbury on May 5…One of four Pilgrim Conference All-Stars on the Norwell roster this year…Played in the Eastern Mass. All-Star game in June…Scored 77 goals her junior season, including a school-record nine in the team's second round playoff win over Hopkinton…Also played soccer and basketball at NHS, and was a co-captain in all three her senior year…Coaches youth lacrosse and basketball in town…National Honors Society member…One of 20 state finalists for the High School Heisman award…Will attend Colby College in Maine, where she will continue her lacrosse career

Kim Berlo - Senior Forward - Scituate

Explosive goal-scorer who combined with teammate and fellow All-Scholastic Alyse Kennedy to form one of the area's top one-two scoring combos…Scored six goals in the Sailors' season opener with Falmouth, and never looked back…Finished the season with 62 goals…Notched four goals and an assist during Scituate's 9-8 win over Hingham on April 14, the program's first ever against the Harborwomen…In that game, notched three scores in four minutes to turn a 7-4 deficit to a 7-7 tie…Also had three clutch goals in the team's first round tournament win over Medfield…Has played the game since seventh grade, and has continued to do so this summer, playing at the high school with friends and teammates…Also played basketball for four years at SHS, and three years of soccer…Will be attending St. Michael's College in Vermont, where she will play lacrosse…Undecided on a major, but considering business…Scituate coach Jen Larose: "Kim was a great scorer who had her own style of play. She was a very valuable asset to our team."

Alyse Kennedy -
Senior (Capt.)
Midfield - Scituate

Arguably the best all-around athlete at Scituate High School, Kennedy is no stranger to our All-Scholastic teams, being named twice each for lacrosse and cross-country and once for indoor track…Earned 12 letters for SHS…Named to this year's Pilgrim Conference All-Star team…Scored 70 goals for the Sailors this season after leading team in scoring last season also…In one of the most remarkable stretches of play you'll ever see, scored seven goals in 20 minutes to lead Scituate to a 16-12 first round win over Medfield, the first tournament win in the program's history…Blessed with great combination of height (5-11) and speed, with the determination to match…Would often win face-offs by popping the ball in the air and simply reaching over everyone else to get it…Was a star in the 800m for the indoor track team, qualifying for New Englands last winter…Has also ridden horses since she was six years old…An artist in her spare time, with watercolors as her specialty…National Honors Society member and Peer Educator…Will attend prep school this year at Phillips Academy in Andover, with her eyes on playing lacrosse at a Div. 1 institution after that…Says University of Cal-Berkeley is her top choice, and is making her second visit to the school at the end of the month…Scituate coach Jen Larose: "All-around, Alyse is just a very, very talented player. If she wants to score goals, she'll score goals. It's like nothing I've ever seen before."

Jackie Lapsley -
Senior (Capt.)
Defense - Scituate

Named the team's Most Valuable Player this season…The consummate team player, willing to play anywhere on the field…Even stepped in at goalie during a couple games…Made her mark in defense, however, with her ability to get possession of the ball and start an attack the other way…Also adept at controlling face-offs…Pilgrim Conference All-Star this season…Plays club lacrosse, first for Mass Elite and now for Team Revolution…Also played soccer at SHS…Has refereed and taught lacrosse at the youth level, and along with teammate and fellow All-Scholastic Alyse Kennedy, helped keep score for local indoor lacrosse league…Peer Educator and member of National Honors Society…Also an Honors Society member for Latin and Spanish, and is considering minoring in the latter in college…Will attend Boston University, where she plans to study pre-med…Considering a career in cardiology, also her mother's profession…Has done Irish step dance since she was five years old, competing against dancers from Ireland and England…Older sister, Catherine, also played lacrosse and soccer at SHS…Scituate coach Jen Larose: "Jackie was truly phenomenal. She's very determined, very hard-working. I could put her anywhere on the field and she'd give her all, no matter what. She was a coach's dream."

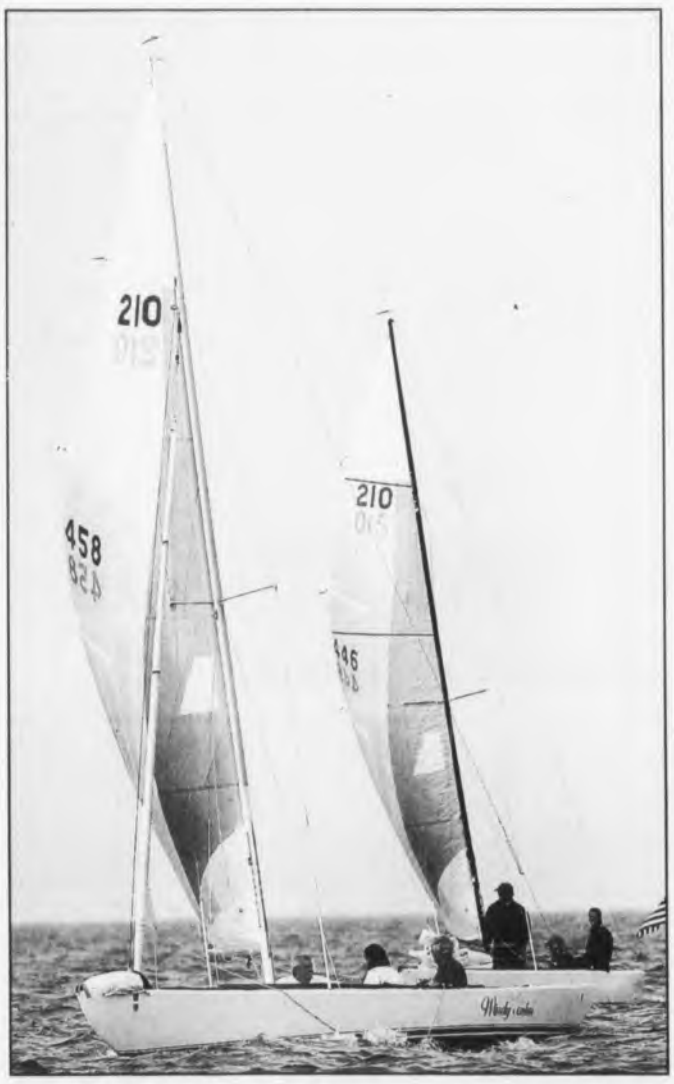
CYC's "Breaking Wind" (452) and the other 210's jostle for position as they crowd the starting line. The vessel, skippered by Ryan Staszko with crew Tim Putney and Erik Coehn, won the first-place C. Raymond Hunt trophy.

National 210 fleet Championship Regatta



The Cohasset Yacht Club's "Breaking Wind," skippered by Ryan Staszko with crew Tim Putney and Erik Coehn, won last weekend's 210 national championship, hosted by the CYC.

Other CYC vessels finishing in the top half of the 26-boat competition were "Four" (skipper Charlie Henry, crew Eric Richter and Adam Durant), "Toucan" (Tom Hamilton, Bob Durant, Steve Gaumer), and "Wahconda" (Wiley Wakeman, Taylor Davis, Carter Noon).

For a complete listing of results, log on to www.210class.com.

The race spanned four days (Thursday through Sunday) and featured boats from the CYC, Hingham, Falmouth, Gloucester, South Boston, Maryland and Michigan.

Cohasset's Jake Previte (20) lets one fly in the Div. 3 state championship game against Medfield. The Skippers' all-time leading scorer is headed to St. Mike's to play Div. 2 lacrosse for the Vermont school.

him as such. He was consistently double-teamed, and as a result, his total of 86 points this year was lower than years past.

Skippers head coach Stew Curran says Previte grew as a player this season when he realized that leading the team in goals was not the most important thing.

"Jake recognized that it wasn't about Jake getting the goal," Curran said. "It isn't so much who scores, but the kid who made the play to create the goal, and I think he understands that."

Previte offers a knowing chuckle when apprised of Curran's comments. The two have formed a solid coach-player relationship, and are now actually teammates in a Franklin-based summer league, where Previte is beguiled by some of the no-look passes and tricky shots his coach unleashes from time to time.

That is just the continuation of a season where Previte says he and his teammates formed a notorious bond with each other.

"It was so much fun, being a bunch of stupid lacrosse players having fun," says Previte, who of course uses the term "stupid" in gest.

From that togetherness stems Previte's nickname, bestowed upon him by teammate and best friend Jon Grimm.

"I was saying something to the team at practice one day, and Grimm just stands up and says, 'You know, you're just the daddy of lacrosse, aren't you,'" Previte recalls. "I became 'The lax daddy' after that."

All joking aside, Previte is a confident, fierce competitor who genuinely does not like to lose.

"I'm a winner, not a loser," he says. "I never liked losing. I know you can learn from it, but at the same time, I don't aspire to lose. I aspire to win."

> "I never liked losing. I know you can learn from it, but at the same time, I don't aspire to lose. I aspire to win."
> Jake Previte

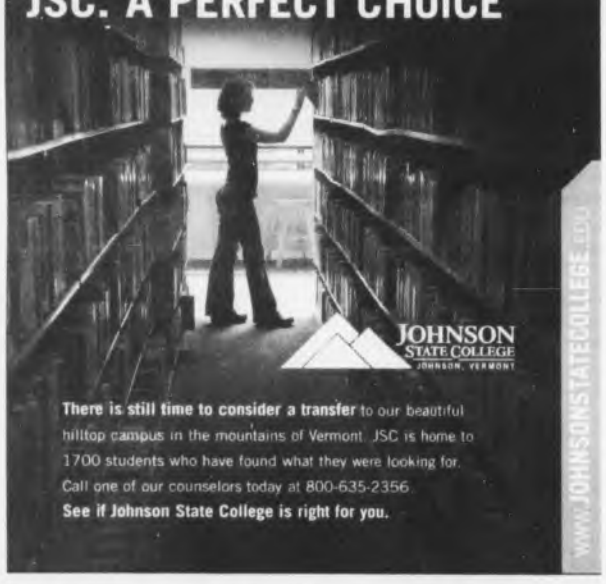
Previte and fellow captains Joe Durkin, Sam Steele and Casey Coleman made those sentiments clear to their teammates not long after a disappointing loss on May 17 to arch-rival Scituate. The loss left the Skippers at 7-7 and in danger of missing the state tournament, and the captains had a meeting with the team to implore everyone to step it up.

And that they did, as the Skippers won three of their last four regular season games to get into the tournament. It didn't stop there, as Cohasset won three games - including a scintillating state semifinal over highly regarded Dover-Sherborn - to advance to the Div. 3 state final against Medfield.

Despite those accomplishments, the 14-4 loss to the Warriors does not sit well with Previte, who was the most emotional of all the players in the game's aftermath. It was over 90 degrees out that day, and the team spent over an hour on a non-air conditioned bus to get to Medfield.

Cohasset got off to a strong start, leading 2-0 halfway through the second period, but Medfield dominated the game's last 30 minutes to win the title. Previte believes that with more regular conditions, it would have been a different game.

"The bus ride and weather just killed us," he says. "Those first two quarters, Medfield was so scared. You could see it on their sideline; their coach was so mad he couldn't even get complete sentences out of his mouth. We just ran out of steam [in the second half]; we had nothing left.



"This still burns me today."

Again, the competitive spirit. Previte says he and the team were congratulated for a great year, but that he couldn't take it to heart, given the final outcome.

"It's hard for me to embrace that as a positive thing," Previte says, referring to the loss. "A 14-4 game is now how I wanted to go out. It doesn't do justice to how good a team we are."

For Previte, however, his lacrosse career is not over. After a summer of painting, working on a lobster boat and working out, he heads next week to St. Michael's College in Vermont, where he was recruited to play the game he loves.

WATD broadcasts from King Jewelers

By Mary Jane Hanron
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

As the mid August sun beat mercilessly on the region, clients at King Jewelers enjoyed lemonade, air conditioning and the sounds of 95.9 WATD radio broadcasting live on this Tax Free Saturday in Massachusetts. Radio personality Joe McMillan shared information and entertainment with listeners and shoppers during the early afternoon event at the store.

Customers arrived early in the day to take advantage of the savings courtesy of the Commonwealth. They purchased jewelry, gifts and even accomplished a bit of early Christmas shopping; truly a result of exceptional forward thinking as outside temperatures hovered near 100 degrees.

"It's much too hot to be outdoors so head to King's for beautiful jewelry and gifts," McMillan said. He narrated descriptions of the showroom, the colorful array of gems and jewelry on display and gift collections available exclusively at the store.

Brightly colored balloons floated in the sultry breeze outside the new King Jewelers building at 812 Chief Justice Cushing Highway indicative of the festive atmosphere within. Various prizes given to guests courtesy of WATD included a gift certificate to Jamie's Pub and tickets to see Bruce Hornsby at the South Shore Music Circus.

McMillan chatted with several customers and members of the King's staff about the store and the community. Vicki King, owner, spoke about the family's history in the world of jewelry which dated back to 1921 when King's grandfather opened a store in Lexington. After several years, the family moved to Scituate bringing the business to the South Shore. King's remains an institution in the area to this day.

"Our business is very much about 'family,'" said King, as she stood before a wall of framed photos depicting her grandparents and father many years ago. Mounted on the wall behind her was a handsome key-wound clock regulator, which has graced each location since the company's beginnings and appears in one of the hung photos, taken decades ago. The timepiece continues to tick today, wound faithfully each week by Mrs. King.

"We like to share our sense of family with our customers," King continued. "So much of what we do focuses on special times in life that are shared by generations. We know how important jewelry is as a symbol of memories and achievements. We strive to keep our jewelry and gifts different from what you see elsewhere so people have somewhere to find a wide assortment from the classic to the rare and extraordinary. That's why we have children and grandchildren of customers continue to visit us and even call to order from us if they move to other parts of the country. New customers find us every day and we hope this begins a family tradition for them, also."

King said she is thrilled with the store's new location1-1/2 miles south on Route 3A from its previous location. The new building also accommodates three other businesses: Peridot Spa, Accord Stationery, and Dillon and Company Furniture.

WATD, the South Shore's radio station based in Marshfield is another business that has had high visibility in the region for many years. Renowned for regional news, traffic, weather and features of local interest, their remote live broadcasts bring enthusiasm and fun to varied settings.

"It's been great hosting WATD today," said King. "It's the middle of summer and it's been such a busy and party-like atmosphere, you would think Christmas was next week!!"

'In the Game' exhibition at SSAC

The South Shore Art Center is announcing an exhibition of artwork incorporating the theme "In the Game" to be on display Oct. 28 to Dec. 31. The exhibition is open to all game-based art. This includes games as art or about art; art as games or about games. "In the Game" is open to all artists, no geographical restrictions. Work must have been completed since January, 2002, and not previously exhibited at the South Shore Art Center. As this theme is open to wide interpretation, a broad array of work from cutting edge to traditional is welcome. Cash awards will be distributed

William Stover, assistant curator for the Department of Contemporary Art at the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, is the juror for this national exhibition. Stover's recent projects at the MFA include the exhibitions "John Currin Selects" and the first American museum exhibition of British artist Cerith Wyn Evans.

For information or an entry form call 781-383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org.

Dog training

The Recreation department will hold a five-week, beginner dog training course on Wednesday evenings from 6 to 7 p.m. starting Aug. 24. This will be the last session given until next season.

Good Manners for Beginners teaches the beginner level obedience commands such as sit, stay, come, down, take, drop, heel, don't touch, watch me, and other basics. Also covered are behavioral problems such as jumping, mouthing and chewing. Handouts on dog obedience and behavior training are given out at each class.

For more information call 781-878-4343 or 781-383-4109.

Old documents are restored through a painstaking process

University, has restored a military commission sent to Hingham resident Pyam Cushing in the mid-1700s. In addition, they have restored eight letters of the same time period for the Hingham library, which document Hingham's history.

"This is a fascinating collection," Morse said.

The restoration process began roughly six weeks ago, when Nackman and Morse met for the first time. Nackman is originally from North Carolina and just finished her sophomore year at Tufts. While in her first year of college, Nackman said she began thinking of going into art conservation and from there, became a student member of the American Institute for Conservation of Historic and Artistic Works (AIC).

The AIC publishes a directory of members and Nackman said she went through the entire list to find conservators in the Boston area that could possibly help her in her efforts to set up a summer internship. Nackman said she sent out 117 e-mails to conservators on the list and Morse was one of the first to respond.

"Elizabeth (Morse) has been so generous. She let me use her space and she donated her time, materials and education," Nackman said. "Everyone is benefiting from Elizabeth. She's so dedicated to the field, and she's keeping it going with future generations."

Nackman and Morse began the difficult task of working on the military commission first.

"The first challenge was getting it out of the frame," said Nackman, as it had been hanging at the Old Ordinary on Lincoln Street, one of the Hingham Historical Society's antique properties which houses artifacts.

Upon looking at the piece, Nackman said Morse hoped there would be wooden brackets holding the paper in place, which when removed would allow the document to be easily lifted out.

"At that point, I had no experience," said Nackman, which made her a little nervous when removing the brackets. But as the project went on, she gained confidence and realized she had the skills to restore without doing any harm to the documents.

The piece came out with ease and from there, latex sponges were used to clean the surface. After that, the two created a humidity chamber to help restore the paper's moisture, as it had become brittle over the years. A special layer of Gore-Tex was placed over the paper to ensure it does not actually get wet, but becomes relaxed enough to release some of its creases.

To help repair tears, Nackman and Morse used Japanese tissue and wheat starch paste. Using the two together, "you can mend the tear slowly," Nackman recalled.

All the mending is done from the back, and once complete, the paper was placed under weights to completely flatten it out.

When dealing with antique documents, Nackman said it is not necessary to wear gloves, but hands must be completely clean.

"You have to try not to touch your face or your hair," she said.

Nackman said she went through a very similar process with the library's letters. However, some of those documents were literally clumps of paper, and had to be put through a bath. Nackman said when putting the paper through the bath process, "Yellow came billowing out."

In addition, another letter was torn into four separate pieces.

"Rachel (Nackman) cleaned it up, and put it back together so it's the way it's supposed to be," said Juliana Holbrook, head of technical services at the Hingham Public Library.

"We had no idea what they were. They were in terrible, terrible shape and barely readable. It was hard to make sense of them. But now, this is phenomenal to see," Holbrook said.

The letters will be kept in archival boxes in the library in a climate-controlled environment and will not be on display. However, they will be available for scholars, who would like to see them. Anyone who wishes to see the documents must first ask a librarian.

At some time in the future, Holbrook said there may be an opportunity to have the documents on disk or on microfilm, which would allow for study without worrying about potential damage.

A replica of the military commission will be hung in a two-sided glass frame in the Old Ordinary, which will enable it to be read on both sides. The original will also be placed in an archival box in a climate-controlled environment.

"They were in terrible, terrible shape and barely readable. It was hard to make sense of them. But now, this is phenomenal to see."

— Juliana Holbrook, Hingham Public Library

Dennis Corcoran, library director, said he is thrilled with what Nackman and Morse have been able to accomplish.

"We never could have afforded to undergo this kind of preservation activity. It is no doubt beyond our budget," he said, adding all services were offered gratis.

But Morse said the pleasure was all hers, and she hopes to work with both the historical society and library again on preservation projects.

"This was a great educational experience for Rachel and a way of making a contribution to both of these institutions," she said.

Cohasset Police support 'You Drink & Drive. You Lose.'

Labor Day weekend should be a time to enjoy the unofficial end of summer in New England — not to be a victim or the cause of an alcohol-related crash. To help keep Massachusetts roadways safer during this holiday period, the Cohasset Police Department will join 335 Massachusetts state and local law enforcement agencies as well as thousands more across the nation in support of a "You Drink & Drive. You Lose." mobilization from Aug. 19 to Sept. 5.

This mobilization combines extra state and local traffic enforcement with public information to reduce impaired driving and it is coordinated by the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau, a program of the Executive Office of Public Safety.

"We want this "You Drink & Drive. You Lose." mobilization to help everyone stay safer on the roads, especially over the Labor Day weekend," said Chief James Hussey. "During this holiday time, and all year-round, make sure you are sober and well-rested behind the wheel, have everyone buckled up, obey speed limits and report suspected impaired drivers by calling 911."

The Cohasset Police Department recommends that if you host a party where alcohol will be available, offer non-alcoholic beverages and food to prevent drinking from becoming the focus of your gathering. Do not tolerate underage drinking on your property as you may be held liable under the state's "social host" law. If you are heading out to an event and plan to consume alcohol, be sure to designate beforehand a sober driver or take a taxi or mass transit.

There were four people killed in motor vehicle crashes over the Labor Day holiday period in Massachusetts in 2004.

Impaired driving is a serious crime that could cost you your freedom, your job, your license, and kill or injure you and innocent people. Approximately 16,000 people are arrested annually for drunk driving in Massachusetts. A first-time drunk driving conviction can cost more than $10,000. To keep our roadways safer, the Romney administration has filed "Melanie's Bill" to toughen the state's laws against repeat drunk drivers.

To prevent as well as apprehend drunk or drugged drivers during this "You Drink & Drive. You Lose." mobilization, the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau is providing $500,000 of grant funding for additional state and local traffic enforcement as well as $450,000 for supporting public information. Additionally, the GHSB distributed earlier this summer handheld Preliminary Breath Test Units to 175 local Massachusetts police departments to assist their enforcement efforts involving impaired drivers as well as underage drinkers.

"You Drink & Drive. You Lose." — It's true on Labor Day weekend and throughout the year. For more information, go to www.mass.gov/ghsb.

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

TAKE A HEARING INSTRUMENT FOR A TEST DRIVE

When you are in the market to purchase a car, the automobile dealer will usually agree to let you take the vehicle that interests you for a test drive. Increasingly, this consumer-friendly option is being offered by hearing specialists. Life's SoundSuite utilizes cutting edge visual and surround sound technology to create a number of life-like natural sound environments in which the consumer can "test drive" various hearing instruments. All this can be accomplished without ever leaving the office. This technology can be used to create such challenging listening environments as restaurants and large halls, where ambient noise may hamper the ability to hear conversation or a speaker. This allows you to select a hearing instrument on the basis of performance.

One of the most important things we do at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER is help all our patients comprehend their hearing impairments and help them be aware of the products available today to help improve their lives. Because hearing loss varies by type and degree, a Board Certified Hearing Instrument Specialist is the professional you'll want to rely on to find the most appropriate hearing instrument for your particular needs. For complete hearing health care services, call us at 781-337-1144. We're easy to find at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Building in Weymouth.

P.S. Once a hearing instrument is selected, it can be programmed to perform in accordance with the wearer's personal needs and preferences.

Hello, your Majesty

First-time cruisers sample Norwegian's Bermuda sailing

By BRIAN BALLOU

Growing up in land-locked Arizona, my experiences with the ocean were limited -- I dipped my toe in the Pacific once during a college trip. And prior to taking a Spirit of Boston cruise in May, I had never been on a boat larger than a dingy.

But that all changed with my Norwegian Majesty cruise to Bermuda in early July.

Pulling up to the terminal in South Boston, my wife and I unloaded our three bags and headed for the check-in line. Thirty minutes later, we were aboard. It was somehow a relief that the inside of the ship looked like a hotel, with red carpet, shiny handrails, long narrow hallways and elevators. We headed for Deck 7, where our room was located.

Aside from my concerns about being on the open ocean for the first time in my life, I worried about spending a week in cramped quarters. But I was pleasantly surprised. Our stateroom wasn't sprawling, but there was enough room to comfortably walk around the twin-sized beds, attached to make a queen. The room included an ample desk, a mirrored closet, and a corner stand with a TV airing several free movie channels. The bathroom was small, but manageable.

We unpacked and headed out to discover the Majesty. But after barely walking up a flight of stairs, all guests were asked via the public address system to report to the mandatory safety drill.

Some of the repeat cruisers grumbled about having to stand under the sun for the 40-minute drill. But most seemed to appreciate the meticulous instruction from the crewmembers. My lingering trepidation about going out to sea diminished.

After the drill, we simply followed an ever-growing wave of people headed for the top deck.

Stepping out onto the deck, my wife and I were handed tall glasses of some exotic alcoholic drink (which we took before realizing they were $6.95 each).

Around us people danced to a four-man Jamaican steel-drum band, swam in one of two salt-water pools, sunbathed and plucked barbecue from a buffet.

The Bon Voyage Sailaway Party was in full swing and we hadn't even left the dock yet.

As we pulled out and the Boston skyline shrunk in the horizon, my wife started feeling queasy. She grew up in the Cape Verdean islands, so I figured she wouldn't have a problem and I would be the one to get seasick. But I never did. After picking up motion-sickness pills from reception, she was good to go.

The breathtaking vistas of Bermuda give visitors exactly the escape they're looking for.

The day and a half at sea it would take us to get to Bermuda seemed to revolve around the ship's restaurants. Food was everywhere, and it seemed as though the 1,700 cruisers were always hungry. NCL's "freestyle" dining format made life simple. There were six restaurants, two that charged $15-$20 cover fees, the rest free. Soda and alcohol are extra. Many cruisers opted to purchase a $40 sticker that allowed them unlimited soda.

After dinner on the first night, we went to the Palace Theater at the back of the ship.

I thought we were lucky to secure a front-row seat. Then, at the end of his show, pint-sized comedian/acrobat Rudi Macaggi started looking for a few good men to pull onstage. I tried to shrink in my seat, but he pulled me onstage with three other unsuspecting guys.

The Norwegian Cruise Line's Majesty sails out of Boston for Bermuda.

"Sit on these stools," he said. Easy enough. "Now lay back and rest on the next person's lap and keep your feet on the floor." Again, easy enough. Then he took the stools away and left. The crowd roared in laughter. We laughed too, knowing how silly we must have appeared. We held on for several minutes until we collapsed on the floor. We took our bows.

The next day in the morning buffet line, several people gave me a pat on the back. One man said he enjoyed seeing the whole thing on television. Huh? Turns out, everything was recorded and broadcast the next day on the ship's channel.

Even without my newfound celebrity status, it was easy to engage other cruisers in conversation. The mood was always upbeat and relaxed. There were plenty of cruisers in their 30s and 40s, as well as older folks. Most passengers were from Boston or elsewhere in New England; the drive crowd. Kids were well-represented and the ship kept them busy with morning to night activities.

Every morning, my wife and I spent an hour in the gym to counteract all the eating. Other activities we could have participated in included fitness classes, bingo and art auctions.

For its four days in Bermuda, the ship docked in St. George, about a half-hour from the capital, Hamilton. Free meal vouchers were issued for those who wanted to try a meal on the island, a nice touch.

Heading home, the waters were a bit more choppy, caused by the effects of a severe storm in the Caribbean, according to the ship's captain. Everyone seemed to adjust well to the pronounced swaying.

On our last night aboard the ship, we finally decided to go to the places we had avoided on the first leg of our cruise -- the casino and the duty-free shopping. My wife and I hit the slots. We made a fine $40 donation. Then we hit the blackjack tables. I was out after 45 minutes, but my wife, lady luck at her side, played for two hours before losing her final chip (total donation $100). In the duty-free shop, we actually got something in return for our money. We picked up discounted colognes and gifts.

After that, we checked out some of the ship's 11 bars and lounges, settling on a spot featuring live jazz.

Pulling into Boston, I felt like hiding in a closet and doing it all over again.

The Norwegian Majesty sails roundtrip cruises from Boston to Bermuda through October, and again beginning in May. Special promotional prices are from $499 per person. For reservations, call 800-327-7030, or go to www.ncl.com

Village work to start soon

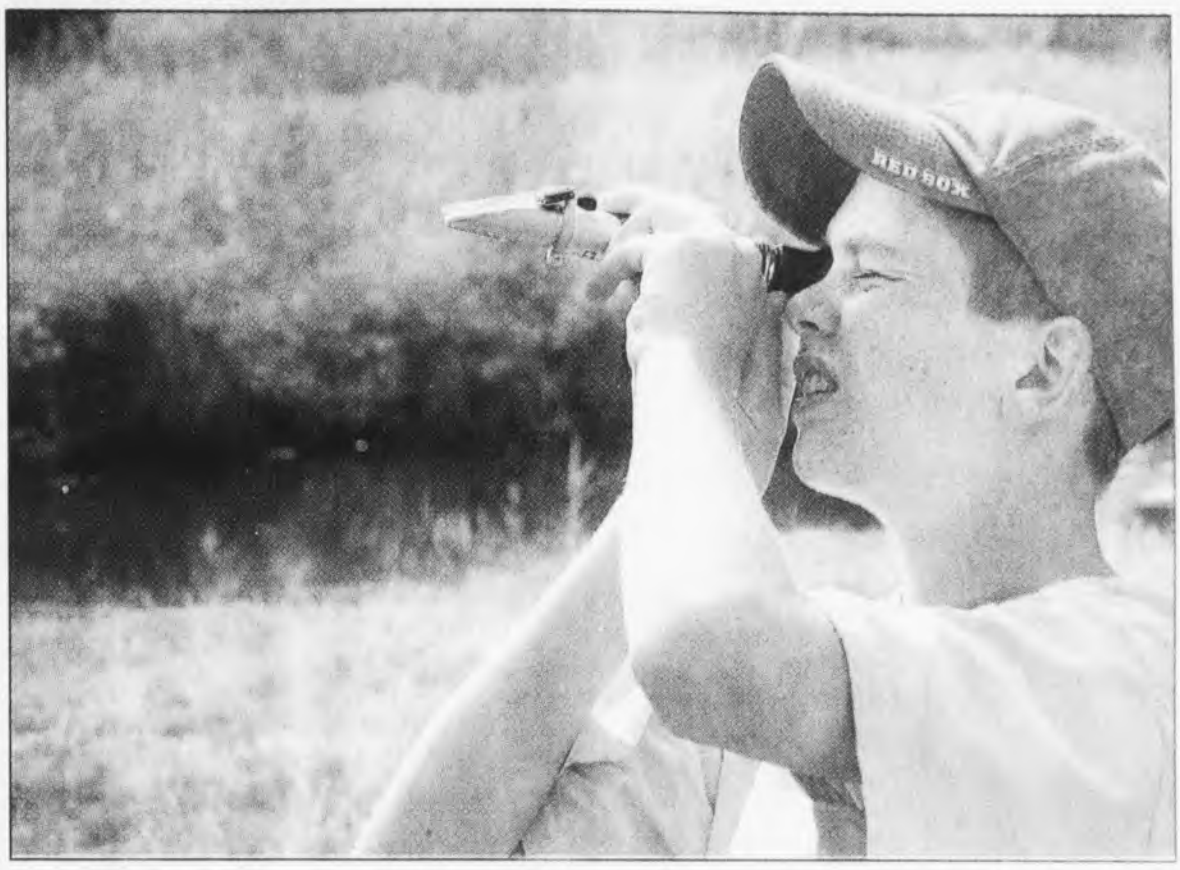
$1.4M project to help streetscape

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The downtown area could begin getting a facelift within the next few weeks. Northern Construction has been chosen bring the Village Revitalization Project to fruition, and with a spring 2006 deadline for project completion, town officials want work to begin as soon as possible.

"We wanted them the second week in September," said selectman Ralph Dormitzer, who has been working to finalize the downtown project, but it will depend on the availability of equipment and employees. "We have to have this finished by May 30, 2006 and that's not a lot of time," he said, which means the sooner the company can begin work, the better.

Dormitzer said last Thursday, members of the Downtown Village Revitalization Review Committee met with representatives from Northern Construction to discuss the project. He said the contract has not yet been signed, but the town is scheduled to meet with the principal of the company Monday, Aug. 29 at 2 p.m., to tie up any loose ends.



"We have to have this finished by May 30, 2006 and that's not a lot of time."
— Selectman Ralph Dormitzer

Three bids were submitted for the job and Northern Construction's was the lowest at $1,421,321. One other company submitted a similar $1.4 million bid, and a third company bid around $1.9 million, which was more money than the town has to spend on improvements.

The $1.8 million Village Revitalization project is being paid for through grants, not local property taxes, and the town has roughly $1,169,000 left to spend. Streetscape

A sign alerts motorists that Beechwood Street is closed ahead. The road will be closed for roughly one month as construction crews install a railroad grade crossing.

Greenbush sign of the times

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Beechwood Street is now closed to through traffic, and will remain closed for roughly one month.

Crews have begun construction on the Beechwood Street grade crossing, which means motorists will need to seek alternate routes to reach Rte 3A from South Main Street. There should not be any major construction taking place in North Scituate during the Beechwood Street closing, which makes it a viable alternate means of accessing Rte. 3A, as is Pond Street.

Construction has begun on the Beechwood St. grade crossing. Motorists need to seek alternate routes to reach Rte. 3A from South Main St.

During the closure, the MBTA will be building the railroad bed, laying the infrastructure for the gates, and putting the rails in. Median barriers for the crossing will depend on the driveway configuration to be determined for the condominiums at 39 Beechwood St.

Following the Beechwood Street crossing work, construction will begin on the intersection of Spring and Pond streets. The two projects will not overlap, as there will be road closures for the Pond/ Spring intersection as well.

For more information, please contact Greenbush liaisons Tom Gruber at cgbaffairs@townofcohasset.org or Mark Brennan at cgbengineering@townofcohasset.org or by phone at (781) 383-3094.

Selectmen grant full liquor license

KoKo Island site to go Mexican

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Any uncertainty about granting a liquor license to the proposed Acapulcos Mexican restaurant is gone from the minds of the board of selectmen.

Tuesday, Aug. 23, the board granted a full liquor license to Chimichanga, Inc., the company that will run the restaurant in the former KoKo Island building on Rte. 3A.

During the first round of the restaurant's liquor license hearing July 26, selectmen said they were concerned about information they had heard regarding an Acapulcos restaurant in Norwood. Town Manager Bill Griffin had been informed a bartender at that restaurant had served alcohol to a minor, and selectmen said they needed absolute assurance the same situation would not occur in Cohasset.

At the time selectman Rob Spofford said, "We have a lot of youth in this town and I'm very sensitive to the issue of serving minors," adding he needed reassurance that what happened in Norwood will never happen in Cohasset. The board voted to continue the hearing to allow time for more information to be compiled and allow owner of the restaurant David Brambila to attend the second hearing.

But Tuesday, the board was impressed with what it saw, as the owners had sent much information prior to the hearing, including letters of reference from other towns which are currently home to an Acapulcos Restaurant.

A true Marine to the core

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

William C. Laidlaw was determined to be a Marine. Before he was even old enough to enlist, he would make the trip down to the local recruitment office almost every week to find out about joining.

Eager to begin his career as one of the few and the proud, Laidlaw convinced recruiters he was 18 years old at the age of 17 and enlisted before his time. Once a Marine, Laidlaw served in Okinawa, Japan as well as in the Philippines.

Like so many other young men living in the 1960s, Laidlaw was called to duty in Vietnam where he served two tours of duty. But his willingness to serve his country ended in tragedy, when he was killed in action at the young age of 21, forty years ago last week.

"Billy" Laidlaw, as he was known around town, was born on Nov. 3, 1943. At the age of 16, he and his family moved to Cohasset, where they lived at 508A Beechwood St.

Laidlaw exhibited the strong leadership skills he would need to become a great Marine at an early age, as he would round up the younger kids in the neighborhood and lead them in practice drills, marching them around the Beechwood Ballpark in military style, which they loved. Once enlisted, he used those engrained skills to rise up the ranks, becoming a lieutenant corporal.

Being a Marine is dangerous, but early in his career, Laidlaw

Name: Nathan Needle

Occupation: Volunteer at the Center for Student Coastal Research and senior at Cohasset High.

Best day of your life: Watching the sunset with 25 of my best friends over South Water Caye, an island off Belize, during a high school trip.

Best vacation: High school trip to Belize this past year.

Favorite season: Summer because that means it's time for the Appalachia Service Project which I have participated in for the past two years. This year we went to West Virginia and last year, Kentucky.

Favorite holiday: Halloween.

Favorite meal: Cheese pizza.

Best book: "The Da Vinci Code" by Dan Brown.

Best actor: Chris Farley.

Best TV show: "Family Guy."

Pet peeve: People who are stuck-up.

Dumbest thing I've ever done: Doing a flip off the Mill River Bridge and landing in a belly flop.

Goal: Getting early acceptance into a good college.

Person you'd most like to meet: Comedian, Dane Cook.

Biggest worry: Letting my confidence get the best of me – I can do a lot of stupid stuff.

Best part of Cohasset: The Center for Student Coastal Research and the harbor.

Both trucks involved in Tuesday's head-on collision are at the police station while the accident is under investigation. Pictured above is the GMC Sierra pickup that was hit head on by the Ford Ranger pickup driven by Mark St. John, who is still in intensive care. The two people in the Sierra are still at South Shore Hospital.

Police are investigating Tuesday's head-on collision

Three victims still hospitalized

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Police are investigating what may have caused a head-on collision on a straight stretch of Rte. 3A on Tuesday evening under clear skies.

The accident sent three people to the hospital, including one man who was taken by MedFlight to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

Sgt. William Quigley said the dispatch center received multiple calls shortly after 6 p.m. The accident occurred on Rte. 3A near its intersection with Schofield Road which is roughly an eighth of a mile from the lights at Beechwood.

Police detoured traffic away from Rte. 3A at both Pond and Beechwood streets for roughly four hours to allow emergency medical personnel to help the victims and for police to reconstruct the accident.

All traffic heading northbound on 3A was diverted west on Beechwood Street because the east side of Beechwood is closed (between 3A and South Main Street) for Greenbush grade crossing construction.

Police detoured traffic away from Rte. 3A at both Pond and Beechwood streets for roughly four hours to allow emergency medical personnel to help the victims and for police to reconstruct the accident.

The first officer on the scene reported there were serious injuries, Quigley said. The Cohasset Fire Department called for ambulances from Hull and Scituate.

Cohasset ambulance transported Mark St. John, 46, of 20 Stockbridge St., to Milliken Field where he was taken by MedFlight to Mass. General where he remains in intensive care.

Also injured were Charles Guarente, 45, and his passenger Kathleen Brennan, 34, both of 56 Spring St., who were transported to South Shore Hospital. Both were still in the hospital as the Mariner went to press yesterday.

Police say St. John, who was driving a small 1987 Ford Ranger pickup truck may have crossed the center lane into oncoming traffic, hitting the 1995 GMC Sierra pickup truck driven by Guarente. The airbags deployed in the Guarente's truck.

St. John's dog, a poodle, which was in the front seat with him was killed in the accident.

Preliminary reports from callers said the Sierra pickup truck was on fire, police said. One of the callers from Schofield Road used her home fire extinguisher to help.

Quigley said Weymouth Police Officer Mike Nasuti, who is an accident reconstructionist, was called to the scene to help with the investigation.

Both the vehicles involved were towed to the police station. Quigley said the Norfolk County District Attorney's Office is also involved in the investigation. "The DA's office becomes involved when there are serious injuries and the potential that the accident could be fatal," Quigley said.

Clearing could cut Bassing Beach bacteria

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Bacterial counts at Bassing Beach are extraordinarily high. Resident and environmental biologist Jim Drysdale said from testing which has been conducted in the area, levels are at a point where the beach should be closed to swimming.

In a memo to the board of selectmen, Drysdale said state regulations require towns warn the public of the potential health hazards posed by high levels of bacteria, by displaying a standard poster with a graphic depiction of a swimmer in a red circle with a diagonal hatch mark.

"However, although Bassing Beach has had dangerously high bacterial counts for years (and all of this summer), no signs are posted. The only warning is a yellow flag fluttering amongst a bunch of others at the sailing club," he wrote. "This failure to adequately warn the public exposes the town to law suits from infected individuals. I think the town should be protected against such suits by posting the correct warning," he wrote.

Town Manager Bill Griffin was on vacation this week, but sent a memo to the board of selectmen regarding Drysdale's letter. Griffin said he had spoken with health agent Joseph Godzik and he had said on numerous occasions, the board of health has posted no swimming signs, and those signs have quickly been removed by unauthorized parties. Instead, a series of three yellow flags has been posted in the harbor.

"However, I told Joe (Godzik) that I thought it best to post some signs, even if they only last a short period of time," wrote Griffin.

But to correct the problem which is causing the bacteria, Drysdale said the town needs to take action. He said from the tests he has conducted, the high levels do not seem to be coming from run-off after rain, but instead possibly from the cut — which is a manmade trench used to drain the marsh — which runs from the sailing club to the gulf parallel to Parker Avenue.

"This cut has been allowed to be blocked with debris and the portion near Border Street is essentially stagnant. I have measured levels of fecal coliform and enterococci from this stagnant water using standard procedures and materials employed by the Mass. Department of Public Health. These analyses show very high levels of both types of bacteria, approaching levels in raw sewage. I think this cut should be reopened and flushed as quickly as possible by the DPW. This flushing might lower bacterial counts at Bassing and provide an opportunity to identify the source of the human fecal material," he wrote.

In light of Drysdale's findings, selectman Gary Vanderweil made a motion at the board's Tuesday meeting to request the conservation commission allow emergency clearing of the cut and the culvert under Border Street which leads to the Gulf River.

"This is considered an emergency due to extreme coliform counts off Bassing Beach, almost directly opposite the entrance to the cut," said Vanderweil.

Vanderweil's motion requested the full width of the cut be cleared to remove all debris that is choking off flow in the 50 feet at the southerly end of the cut. In addition, he requested all weeds and approximately one foot of silt, down to a level equal to the invert of the culvert, be removed in the same 50 feet. For the remaining length of the cut, he asked that patches of weeds and debris be removed, and disposed of off-site.

In addition, selectman Michael Sullivan said he would like to ask Godzik to look into the functionality of the septic systems of the cottages on Bassing Beach. He said there are two or three cottages located on the island in the middle of Cohasset Harbor, and "There's a good group of people who go out there." He said faulty septic systems could also be adding to the problem.

Selectman chairman Fred Koed pointed out Bassing Beach is actually Scituate property, which might impact the town's level of authority. However, he said it is his understanding the town has some cross-jurisdiction privileges, and that is something that should be looked into.

The motion passed unanimously.

Streetscape improvements slated for early September improvements have been sidetracked over the years due to disagreement over how much and exactly what should be done to revitalize the village area. Redesigns of the plans have cost the town time and money. The project was put out to bid last winter, but only one company responded and the bid was too high, which required putting the project out to bid a second time.

"We had $1,187,000 as of May," to spend on the project, said Dormitzer, adding since then, roughly $18,000 was spent on reworking the plans with the Waterfield Design Company for the second bidding process.

There were three alternates included in the Northern Construction bid, which will allow the town to make deductions from the project to save money. The first option is to eliminate the extension of the project up South Main Street roughly from attorney Richard Henderson's office to the Cohasset Historical Society, saving the town $94,273. Option two eliminates Brook Street entirely from the project, saving $129,323. Eliminating Elm Street is option three, and frees up an additional $192,785.

"If we do all of it, the bid becomes a $1,004,940 bid," said Dormitzer.

Basing downtown plans on the roughly $1 million bid which includes the three possible eliminations, Dormitzer said there were items that then needed to be factored back into the cost. He said the town has to have a contingency because with construction projects, there are usually unforeseen events that take place which will require spending money.

In addition, when construction takes place, there will need to be police details, and Dormitzer said the cost to cover details ranges from roughly $40,000 to $60,000. "That's a big hunk of money," the town must plan for, he said, adding in some cases there will need to be two officers on duty — one at each end of the construction area — when construction really gets underway.

The town will also need to pay for supervision of the project, which will be a combination of the town's Greenbush liaison team of Tom Gruber and Mark Brennan, as construction on the MBTA's Greenbush line will be taking place in the downtown area at the same time the downtown project is happening, and someone from the Waterfield Design Group which drew up the plans for the project. Dormitzer said that could cost the town another $30,000 to $40,000.

With Brook and Elm streets being left out of the equation, Dormitzer said there needs to be an obvious point where the project should end on South Main Street before it encroaches on those streets. He said therefore, the crosswalks at Brook Street and South Main Street and Elm Street and South Main Street will be improved, outlining a definitive point of improvements. All crosswalks for the downtown area will be made from concrete pavers and will be banded by granite.

"That was the lowest cost alternative," said Dormitzer, adding the crosswalks on Brook and Elm streets will cost the town roughly $20,000.

Dormitzer said will be some potential opportunities in the contract to save money. He said there is some water department work which must be done during the construction, and the town may ask the Cohasset Water Department to pick up the tab. Therefore, it would be eliminated from the contract.

Dormitzer said this latest bid will enable the town to achieve the improvements which matter most, including the streetscape in the major part of the downtown area, and pocket parks at the end of Elm Street and Depot Court. He said the stretch of South Main Street by Saint Stephen's Church will be widened, and a new low-profile curb will be installed which will allow emergency vehicles to ride up over it if necessary, but will provide protection for pedestrians.

There will be additional trees with the new streetscape, and Dormitzer said he believes the town can count on at least a half dozen being planted. There will be an area surrounding the trees which will allow them to be properly watered.

The Downtown Revitalization Review Committee will meet with the principal of Northern Construction Monday, Aug. 29 at 2 p.m. to finalize the contract for the downtown area. For more information please contact the selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105.

Laidlaw served two tours of duty in Vietnam narrowly escaped death. He had taken an extended leave to stay home an extra day to see his newborn niece Jen McAuliffe, and the extra time off changed his orders to travel with his Marine unit to Hawaii. The plane that was carrying the unit crashed, and all on board were killed.

But despite his previous luck, on Aug. 18, 1965, Laidlaw was serving as a tank commander when the vehicle he was in struck a land mine, ending his life. Laidlaw's was the last in a line of three tanks, the first two of which made it safely past.

Laidlaw's death was very tough on his family. In fact, when his body was brought back to Cohasset to be buried in Central Cemetery, his brother Ken Laidlaw said he was in such shock, he didn't cry. Rather, it was on Memorial Day the following year, while the parade was marching down Beechwood Street, that he finally burst into tears, realizing he would never again hear his brother's voice or enjoy his company.

But for Laidllaw's grandmother, Mildred Cripps, the news was no surprise. Laidlaw's sister Jean McAuliffe remembers when the family arrived to deliver the news that her grandson had been killed in the war, Cripps said she already knew because he had spoken to her the night before in her sleep.

After his death, Laidlaw's fellow Marines wrote many letters to his family, which were compiled and kept in a scrapbook. Ken Laidlaw said he remembers looking through the letters and seeing just how respected his brother was by his fellow Marines. He also learned his brother was truly a hero, as he had risked his own life more than once to save the lives of others during the war.

To ensure Laidlaw's sacrifice is never forgotten, a memorial square has been dedicated in his honor, which residents drive by every day. Laidlaw's memorial square can be found at the intersection of Beechwood Street and Norman Todd Road.

When Laidlaw's memorial was dedicated in 1996, Marine Sergeant John Morgan said a few words in his honor. "On Nov. 10, 221 years ago, one of the greatest fighting forces and brotherhoods known to man, the United States Marine Corps, was born. One of the brave men who belonged, fought, and died as a member of this brotherhood, was Corporal William C. Laidlaw. One hundred years from now, we will all be gone and almost forgotten, but because of the memorial at Beechwood Street and Norman Todd Road for Corporal Laidlaw and what he did for this country, he will remain in the hearts and minds of every Marine and the people of Cohasset," he said.

Vietnam took a heavy toll on the town, as eight men were killed, including Peter J. Albiani, Jr., Allen F. Keating, John Paul Lyon, Edward R. Maree, Craig M. Simeone, Dennis J. Reardon, and Laidlaw's good friend Peter Cogill who lived across from the Beechwood Ballpark on Church Street. Cohasset lost the same number of soldiers during World War II. The worst eight months of Vietnam were in 1969, when the town lost five men, four at six-week intervals.

For his service in the war, Laidlaw was honored by the Department of the Navy, the United States Marines, and the United States of America with the Purple Heart, and the Bronze Star with a Combat V.

Chairman of the Cohasset Veterans Memorial Committee Glenn Pratt provided the Mariner with the information for this article. For more information on William Laidlaw or any of the Cohasset veterans who have paid the ultimate price in the name of freedom, please visit the Cohasset Veterans Memorial Committee Web site at www.cohassetveteransmemorial.com.

Squares named after fallen servicemen

William C. Laidlaw is one of many veterans who have been honored by the town of Cohasset for their service to the country. The town lost seven other men during the Vietnam War who have all been memorialized with squares or other memorials in town including:

- Peter J. Albiani, Jr.: Intersection of Jerusalem and Gammons Roads
- Peter Cogill: Intersection of Church and Doane Streets
- Allen F. Keating: Intersection of Summer Street and Black Horse Lane
- John Paul Lyon: Intersection of North Main Street and Joy Place
- R. Edward Maree: The boat landing at the end of Parker Avenue
- Dennis J. Reardon: Corner of Elm Street and Stephen's Lane near the police station entrance
- PFC Craig M. Simeone: intersection of Lantern Lane and Pond Street

The mothers of the eight servicemen that gave their lives during Vietnam are memorialized at the Gold Star Mothers Monument at Woodside Cemetery.

COHASSET'S WEEK

School committee to meet in Sept.

The school committee was scheduled to meet last night (Thursday), but cancelled its meeting due to a sparse agenda. The committee has rescheduled for Sept. 8 and will also meet Sept. 22. The first day of school is Sept. 6.

Cohasset is 'No Place For Hate'

Cohasset has been officially re-certified as a No Place for Hate community for the year of 2005. In a letter to Allison Moskow of the Cohasset Diversity Committee, the New England region Anti-Defamation League notified the town of its renewed certification.

"Having been certified in the past, your community has helped to create a standard of respect for individual and group differences throughout Massachusetts and our nation, while leading the town of Cohasset in the important fight to end racism, anti-Semitism, and bigotry of all kinds. Being re-certified as a No Place for Hate community demonstrates your continued dedication to the program's goals and ideals," the letter said.

Cohasset was first recognized as a "No Place for Hate" community in 2001, making it one of the oldest membership groups in the Commonwealth.

Water dept. work starts on Aug. 26

Starting today (Aug. 26), the water dept. will begin replacing water service connections downtown.

"We are timing this project to begin before the downtown revitalization project begins," said Glenn Pratt, water commission chairman. "This work will improve water service to our customers downtown," he noted.

The project will affect water customers on So. Main St. between Depot Court and Brook St., and on Elm St. between So. Main St. and Brook St.

Work is scheduled to take place at night, between Aug. 26 and Sept. 15, Monday through Thursday, from 8 p.m. to 7 a.m. General contractor is R.M. Pacella.

Around the middle of September, the water dept. will also begin replacing the undersized water main on Pond St. between Lantern Lane and Woodland Drive.

Rockland Trust hosts food pantry drive

Rockland Trust hosts food pantry drive As part of its continued commitment its communities, Rockland Trust is currently hosting a drive to collect non-perishable food products and other items of need for local food pantries. Items will be collected at all Rockland Trust branches including Cohasset's.

"While the summer is typically a time for vacationing, it is important that we also remember those in need," said Chris Oddleifson, President and Chief Executive of Rockland Trust. "We are delighted to unite our customers, employees and other members of our communities to keep our communities strong."

Rockland Trust will collect non-perishable food items at each of its branches through September. Suggested items include: Mixes, Frosting; Beans: Baked and Pork & Beans; Canned Fruit; Canned Meats: Ham, Stew, Chili, Hash, Spam, Chicken, etc.; Canned Potatoes: White and Sweet; Canned Vegetables; Cereals: Hot and Cold; Coffee, Tea and Cocoa; Condiments: Mustard, Ketchup, Mayo, Oil, Salad Dressing; Crackers and Cookies; Evaporated Milk and Powdered Milk; Gelatin and Pudding Mixes; Instant Potatoes; Juices and Drink Mixes; Laundry and Dish Detergent; Macaroni and Cheese; Microwave Popcorn and Snack Foods; Pancake Mix and Syrup; Pasta and Noodle Mixes, Pasta Sauce, Canned Tomatoes and Tomato Paste; Peanut Butter, Jelly and Marshmallow spread; Pet Food; Rice Soups and Canned Pastas; Sugars, Flour, Salt and Pepper; Toiletries: Toothpaste, Toothbrushes, Shampoo, Conditioner, Deodorant, Soap, Toilet paper.

Rentals never planned for Cedarmere development

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

During Cook Estate discussions last week, members of the board of selectmen said it was news to them that Cedarmere would have no rental units. However, former developers for the site say that has always been the plan.

Kelli and David Calhoun, 2 Sheldon Road, along with their business partner Tom Ragno of Lexington, previously owned the 41-acre Hayes Estate, located off Beechwood Street. They proposed plans to build 105-units of senior housing on the site, and took the Cedarmere project through the permitting process. They sold the project, permits and all, to Leggat McCall Properties, LLC in April.

Kelli Calhoun said from the beginning, plans for development included building town homes throughout the site and one building, which would house both market-rate and affordable for-sale condominiums.

"Even in our preliminary plans, the market rate and affordable units in the building were all for sale," she said. Calhoun said in addition, before the project was approved by the planning board, every town board was given a copy of the plans and was asked to review them and provide comments, so the project's makeup should be no surprise.

However, planning board member Peter Pratt said he too was recently surprised to find the project would not have any rental units.

Where confusion may have arisen with the planning board, she said, was during preliminary discussions about the project. There was a point in time before anything had been filed, when the Cedarmere team came before the planning board for an informal discussion and talk of building affordable rental units surfaced. However, that plan never came to fruition.

Calhoun said members of the planning board suggested putting all the rental units into one affordable building, then subdividing the property, which would enable the town to purchase the land and the building. However, she said before plans were formally filed for the project, everyone agreed it would be better to not have the town serve as a landlord, and the project was drafted and filed with for-sale units.

Under the town's Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District (SMROD) bylaw, which the project filed under, Calhoun said there is no requirement for developers to specify whether the units will be for sale or rental units, as long as there is an affordable component which makes up 25 percent of the project. The Cedarmere project was the first project to file under the bylaw.

Members of the senior housing committee say having rentals is an important option for seniors who may be choosing to downsize and want to stay in town.

But confusion or not, the selectmen all signed the Local Initiative Program project application, giving its endorsement of the project to the Department of Housing and Community Development. In order for the affordable units to be "counted" toward the town's affordable housing stock, the town must submit an application to the DHCD stating its approval. In turn, the units become eligible for DHCD consideration and may then be counted toward the mandatory 10 percent affordable housing threshold set by the state.

The LIP application was approved at the board's Feb. 1, 2005 meeting, and was signed by then chairman Michael Sullivan.

The DHCD sent the developers, with a copy to the town, a letter in March, outlining its review of the application. There were still some questions to be answered about the project before it could receive approval, including the fact that the proposal did not include any rents for the LIP units. However, a subsequent letter sent in April indicated that question had been answered in a conversation with the Calhouns, as they said the building will have 31 units of for-sale condominiums, with both affordable and market rate units.

The issue is significant in light of the recent decision picking Deer Hill Partners, LLC, headed up by Cohasset resident George McGoldrick, to develop senior housing on the Cook Estate, located on Sohier Street. Plans for development include building 56 units of senior housing, 31 of which will be located in a central Manor House. All of McGoldrick's units will be for-sale.

Members of the senior housing committee say having rentals is an important option for seniors who may be choosing to downsize and want to stay in town.

At the board's Aug. 16 meeting, just prior to Deer Hill being awarded the bid, selectmen Rob Spofford and Michael Sullivan said they had both been under the impression Cedarmere would be providing 27 affordable rentals.

Sullivan said when ranking the proposals for senior housing on the Cook Estate, he chose Deer Hill partners based upon the assumption Cedarmere would have rentals. He said rental housing for seniors has been a goal in town.

Sullivan said he discovered Cedarmere would have all for-sale units and would not fulfill the rental quotient after he turned in his rankings. [Sullivan and the other selectmen turned in their rankings on Monday (Aug. 15) the day before their vote to allow time for Town Manager Bill Griffin to put together a chart highlighting the three proposals.]

However, Sullivan was part of the 4-1 vote awarding Deer Hill Partners the project, deciding in the end he still preferred that proposal over the others.

Spofford, who voted for Cohasset Associates, said he conducted research on the Cedarmere project just prior to making his choice, and finding out the project would only have for-sale units, he decided to award the most points to local developer Donald Staszko's development instead, due largely in part to its rental component. He said without the rentals from Cedarmere, the town won't have enough diverse housing options for seniors.

The third company bidding to build senior housing on the Cook Estate was Northland Residential.

Seniors could have the option of a rental apartment at Avalon, a 200-unit project planned for off Rte. 3A. Twenty-five percent of those units will be affordable. Avalon, however, is not an age-restricted development. Ground has not broken on that project because the water commission believes its septic system could pollute the town's water supply at Lily Pond. That issue is still tied up in land court.

Mexican cuisine on the horizon for KoKo Island site

Nicholas Felici assured selectmen Cohasset would not be subjected to the kind of incident which took place in Norwood.

"It won't ever happen again," he said, adding the bartender involved in the incident was immediately let go, as that kind of behavior is not tolerated. He said in addition, at the request of the board, a set of liquor policies and an employee handbook have been drafted for the Cohasset Acapulcos which will be unique for that restaurant. Employees will be required to sign a copy of the handbook, indicating they understand and will follow the rules.

Felici explained the Cohasset Acapulcos is allowed to have its own set of rules because the restaurant is not part of a chain. While there are other Acapulcos Restaurants, each has different ownership and each is a separate corporation.

Felici said the Cohasset Acapulcos would be managed by Victor Ruelas, who is also part owner of the company and has a lot of experience in the restaurant business. He has moved to Hull with his family to enable him to be closer to the restaurant.

In addition to following the handbook, Felici said the restaurant will be outfitted with a new technology that will ensure patrons present a valid piece of identification before they are served alcohol. Owner of the restaurant David Brambila said the technology is currently being used in all other Acapulcos restaurants. As manager, Ruelas will oversee the operation of the machine on the premises once the restaurant is open.

Felici said the machine scans a person's identification for authenticity and once recognized, it is stored in a database. The machine looks for any indication the license has been tampered with. Out-of-state licenses can also be scanned for discrepancies.

The restaurant will be outfitted with a new technology that will ensure patrons present a valid piece of identification before they are served alcohol.

However, Felici said the machine will come second to the employees being aware of the rules for "carding" individuals who wish to be served alcoholic beverages. Anyone who looks to be under the age of 30 will automatically be asked for identification, and employees will be trained in how to spot counterfeits. Employees will also be given training on when to stop serving by recognizing when patrons have been given too much alcohol either prior to arriving at the restaurant or during their stay.

There are currently eight other Acapulcos Restaurants in operation in Massachusetts, in the towns of Amesbury, Beverly, Framingham, Franklin, Milford, Norwood, Stratford, and Sudbury. Selectman Gary Vanderweil said he does a lot of business with people in Milford, and from what he has heard, "The restaurant is clean, the food is fresh, and it caters to families." He said he heard the restaurant has between 50 to 60 seats with only roughly 10 of those being at the bar. He said he would welcome the restaurant to the town.

The board agreed and granted its request for a full liquor license.

"I look forward to those margaritas and Mexican food," said Vanderweil.

"In moderation," quipped Felici.

Flashback: A little more than one year ago, Michael Tack, a representative for the Nauset Group, which is renovating the former KoKo Island site, unveiled plans which sent some abutters into a panic. Plans to turn the former Hair-Affair building into a Dunkin' Donuts with a drive-thru caused major concern with Fairoaks Lane neighbors, who worried it would cause noise pollution and an increase in traffic. Plans were also unveiled to turn the former KoKo Island restaurant into another family-style restaurant. While plans had been floated to turn it into another Asian restaurant, they did not pan out. With the granting of the liquor license, Acapulcos is ready to open once renovations are complete. The Dunkin' Donuts sign is up signaling that coffee shop should be open soon.

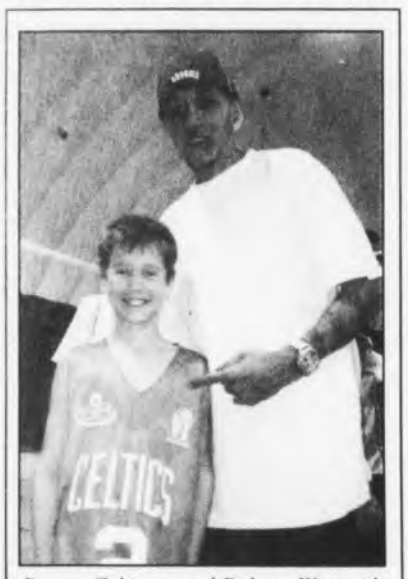
Rebecca Palmer makes her debut!

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

ENJOY SUMMER!



I cannot believe that summer is coming to a close and school is right around the corner. Enjoy these last few weeks and get ready for a new year of learning, challenges and hopefully, not so much snow!

NEW ARRIVAL

Jennifer and Lansing R. Palmer of Cohasset announce the arrival of a beautiful baby girl, Rebecca Elliott, who arrived July 20 at Newton-Wellesley Hospital. Proud grandparents who ready with all those extra hugs are Mr. and Mrs. Ross E. Sherbrooke of Cohasset and Lansing R. Palmer Sr. and Mr. and Mrs. H. L.Bogert III, all of New York, N.Y. Thank heavens for little girls. Congratulations to all.

BRAGA BROTHERS

Cohasset residents Harry and Sebastian Braga won the Hustle Award at the Boston Celtics 2005 Summer Basketball Camp at Basketball City in Boston. The Bragas received their award from Boston Celtics guard Delonte West during the camp award ceremony Aug. 12. Way to go guys!

Boston Celtics guard Delonte West with Harry Braga of Cohasset. (Harry's brother Sebastian was not available for the photo).

AT BATES

Allison R. Earon of Cohasset is among 516 students who are starting at Bates College in Lewiston, Maine this fall. Allison, a 2004 CHS graduate, is the daughter of William Earon and Mary Sheppard, both of Cohasset. Everyone wishes you the best of luck Allison. Let us know how it is going throughout the year.

HOWIE MEETS HOWARD

Cohasset resident Howie Altholtz chats with Howard Dean, former presidential candidate and national chairman of the democratic party, at a recent democratic fundraiser in Boston.

DEAN'S LIST

Rachel McElroy, a junior in the School of International Service at American University in Washington, D.C., where she is majoring in international studies, was named to the spring 2005 dean's list. To earn this honor, Rachel had to maintain a minimum of a 3.5 grade point average. Rachel is the daughter of Joe and Mary McElroy. Congratulations Rachel.

SUMMER READING

This is a thank you for all from Sharon Moody, the children's librarian at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. "Thank you to all the students and families that participated in the summer reading program, 'Going Places at your library.' Your continued support and participation led to a very successful fun filled summer. Also, many thanks to the Friends of the Cohasset Library for funding and hosting the summer events. The program could not have done it without you!"

We are lucky as a community to have these opportunities. Great work.

TEACHER APPRECIATION

Buttonwood Books & Toys, Shaw's Plaza, is hosting a Teacher Appreciation Night on Tues. Sept. 13 at 7 p.m.. Buttonwood will be closing early (7 p.m. to the general public) for this special event. Information, gifts and goodies are the key words to describe this evening. A tote bag full of gifts will be given to those first through the doors (while supplies last!). Betsey Detwiler, owner of Buttonwood Books & Toys, will be giving a brief overview of new fall titles. Please call Buttonwood at 1-781-383-2665 for additional information.

On a personal note, I am getting ready to open a new business called, "One Creative Place"(at Jonathan Livingstone Square) which will offer classes, birthday parties, workshops and services in arts and crafts, science and nature, music, drama, literacy, gym programs, homework studio time and so much more for ages 3 months through adult. We will also be offering space to groups like Scouts and such looking for a meeting space as well as badge workshops etc. It is a fun and exciting time for myself and my family!

That is all for this week. Please send me all of your news and information no later than Tuesdays by noon.

Lonestar in the sky at Music Circus

Astronaut presented CD to group last night

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

There isn't much room for luggage when traveling into outer space. Fortunately, there was room for NASA astronaut Col. Paul Lockhart to bring along his favorite CD.

A Texan through and through, Lockhart has a soft spot for country music, and asked to bring a Lonestar CD as one of his personal items on his last trip to space. But NASA went one step further and arranged for the band to autograph the CD specially for the flight.

But last night (Thursday), after the Mariner went to press, there was a very special meeting at the South Shore Music Circus as Lockhart and the four members of Lonestar — which performed onstage that night — met prior to the show. During the show itself, Lockhart was slated to formally present the band not only with the CD he brought into space, but a certificate acknowledging its authenticity as having traveled to space, and a photograph he took while in space of the CD case floating aboard the shuttle, with Earth readily visible out the shuttle window.

"Their music touches a lot of folks," said Lockhart of the band, adding their songs "Speak to the heart of American values," which is one of the reasons he chose to bring it along on the mission. He said he is only allowed to bring a few personal belongings on missions, and he tries to include items from various organizations he feels do an exceptional job of speaking to the youth of America and have high standards of integrity. He said Lonestar is a band that speaks to the closeness of family and togetherness, and the issues that "really mean something."

But Lockhart jokes, their similar backgrounds were enough to get him to listen. "They're from Texas and I'm from Texas, so that's about all I needed," he said. However, he said by being able to present the band with the CD and certificate, it's just a small way he can say "Thanks," for all they do.

Col. Paul Lockhart, who piloted the Space Shuttle Endeavor in 2002, presented a Lonestar CD that he took with him in space to the country western band at the Music Circus last night.

When he decided he would like to bring the CD with him on his mission, he first received permission from NASA, but then the administrative assistant assigned to his space flight took over. She got in touch with the publicist for Lonestar to inform them about Lockhart's plans, and the band was happy to provide not one, but two autographed copies of the CD, which they signed specifically for the trip. Lockhart returned one of those copies to the band.

Lockhart has wanted to present the CD to the band ever since he returned from piloting the Space Shuttle Endeavor in 2002. However, he and his wife Mary, who is also a fan of the band and actually sparked her husband's interest in the group, have never been in the same area as the band at the same time. But Mary has a family summer home in Hull which she and Lockhart have recently been spending time at, and the South Shore Music Circus was able to arrange the meeting.

With Mary's family connections on the South Shore, Lockhart says they are actually in the area quite a bit. "I always look forward to coming down there (to Cohasset)," he said, adding "It's a beautiful location and people have been very gracious to me. They remind me of the people back home in Texas, but there's the beautiful ocean view. It's very idyllic and a wonderful place to call home."

With just one week of hands-on government experience, the Boys State program has the ability to spark a lifelong interest in politics. It helped shape a young man from Hot Springs, Arkansas into becoming the 42nd President of the United States, and if the enthusiasm of Cohasset students is a gauge, this could be the next hometown of a future leader.

Sponsored by the American Legion, Boys State invites high school juniors from around the country to spend one week on a college campus, participating in mock elections, complete with debates, campaigning, and press conferences. Students compete to win votes for positions in town, city, and state government offices. Almost all 50 states offer the Boys State program.

Brendon Barrett attended Boys State along with Chris Pescatore this year.

JoAnna Hamilton attended Girls State.

"Boys State teaches kids about the politics of their community, state, and nation, and what politics and government is all about."

— Thomas Wigmore, Sons of American Legion

This year, the Massachusetts Boys State program was held from June 11 to June 17 at Stonehill College, and Cohasset High School students Brendon Barrett and Chris Pescatore attended. Roughly 400 students from all over the state participated, thanks to the American Legion and the Sons of the American Legion who pay for the students to attend.

"It makes you feel good," knowing you are part of something that is a real benefit to students, said Commander of the Cohasset Sons of the American Legion Thomas Wigmore. Wigmore has been heading up the effort to send Cohasset students to Boys State for roughly five years. He said the program is very worthwhile for those who attend, and the Legion is a proud sponsor.

Wigmore said choosing students to represent the town is a very involved process which begins each year in December. First, he contacts the principal at the high school to ask for recommendations. Candidates are later interviewed, and academic records are reviewed. Wigmore said only students with a genuine interest in government and politics will be considered.

"I pick the kids, then follow up to make sure they're all set to go," Wigmore said, adding he speaks with parents to answer any questions they might have, and provides families with packets of information to make sure everyone knows what to expect.

Upon being selected to attend, Wigmore said he asks students to make a trip to Town Hall to "get all the budget information they can," including the town report. During the program, students build their own budget and must adhere to it, and having materials from their own hometown helps with that process.

"Boys State teaches kids about the politics of their community, state, and nation, and what politics and government is all about," Wigmore said.

Every year, Wigmore, who is the dispatch supervisor at the Cohasset Police Department, said he travels to watch some of the Boys State debates after work. He said he is always very impressed, but "This year was one of the best groups I've seen."

Brendon Barrett, of Sohier Street, who just finished his junior year at Cohasset High School, was one of two Cohasset students who attended Boys State this year. Fellow classmate Chris Pescatore also attended, but was unavailable for comment, as he spends his summers as a camp counselor in Vermont.

Barrett said the week he spent at Boys State participating in hands-on exercises, taught him more in one week about government than he had learned throughout all his years of schooling.

"I wish we could do things like it in school," he said.

At Boys State, students are broken into two major political parties — Federalists and Nationalists. The platform for each party changes at each Boys State gathering, as students are given the task of coming up with a platform which is agreeable to all involved.

Upon arrival to Boys State, students are broken up into small groups, and Barrett said he instantly became a member of a predetermined city. He participated in elections for the city, and was then appointed by the mayor to serve as chief of police. Barrett's duties as chief required he present a budget which outlined all the department's needs.

"Everything a town would deal with, we dealt with," he said.

Barrett said there were moments when the mock problems facing his fictitious town hit home. His town was being overrun with commuter traffic, and a train had been proposed, but residents did not like the idea of a new rail line being installed. Barrett said he realized his fictitious town was located on the water, and immediately suggested a commuter boat, which went over well with his peers. Barrett said he can now empathize with his local elected officials, as he realized being in government, it is impossible to please everyone all the time.

"I've always scanned the channels and left it on the selectmen's meetings," from time to time, he said, adding he likes having a good grasp of what's going on in town. Now, after experiencing what it's like to sit in the seat of a town official, "I have a lot more respect for the selectmen."

Moving forward, Barrett said the experience has really made him think about whether he would like to pursue a career in politics. Currently, he is working for the summer in State Auditor Joe DeNucci's office.

Girls State

The boys aren't the only ones given the opportunity to participate in a week-long government program. Through the American Legion Auxiliary, young ladies participate in Girls State, which is very similar to Boys State. This year, JoAnna Hamilton of Beechwood Street was chosen as Cohasset's representative and she spent the week of June 19 to June 24 at Bay Path College in Longmeadow.

Hamilton's mother Jane is the former President of the Auxiliary, which is how she found out about the program. She said upon her arrival at Girls State, just like the Boys State program, all participants were divided into cities and towns and into the two parties — Federals and Nationals.

Elections are held for various leadership positions, including governor, lieutenant governor, and attorney general — a role Hamilton's party nominated her for. Candidates for positions must then make speeches and attend press conferences in preparation for an election. While in the end she was not chosen to serve as attorney general, the whole process was a positive, and she ended up serving as police chief, just as Barrett did.

"It is definitely a self-confidence booster, being in a situation where you're with people you don't know," said Hamilton, adding when the goal is to win the votes of peers, students must get past being shy and make new friends, even if out of their element.

When the Boys and Girls State programs have concluded for the year, there is still one more opportunity for students who excelled during their time in the program. The Boys and Girls Nation programs elect a vice president and president during a mock country election.

Students who attend the Boys and Girls Nation program are chosen during Boys and Girls State, and travel to Washington, D.C., to represent their state as a senator. At the conclusion of the election, the vice president and president meet the President of the United States. Boys Nation and Girls Nation were held the last week of July, with the boys attending from July 22 to July 30, and the girls from July 24 to July 31.

GIMME SHELTER

MacKenzie

Hi! My name is MacKenzie. I'm a petite, young black & white tiger female who is less than one-year-old. I am very affectionate and love to play with strings and things. I would be great with children since I am so very gentle.

Please call 1-877-378-1195 or visit www.hsar.org to get an application and set up an appointment to meet me.

The shelter now has new hours for the public: Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 12-2p.m. where you can meet me and other cats.

All Hull Seaside Animal Rescue pets have been tested, vaccinated and spayed/neutered. Hull Seaside has lots of other great pets needing loving homes and are always looking for foster homes. If you'd like to meet our pets or volunteer your services, please call toll-free at 1-877-378-1195 or visit: www.hsar.org to learn more.

Hull Seaside Animal Rescue is a 501(3)c non-profit organization staffed entirely by volunteers.

Sewer rate hike

On Aug. 1, the sewer commission unanimously voted to increase the sewer rate from $6.70 per 100 cubic feet to $7.70. The average household will see an increase of $108 per year. This represents a 15 percent increase over the fiscal 2005 rates.

The Sewer Commission has raised rates to offset our rising costs and operates as an enterprise fund independently from the town budget. In order to keep up with depreciation, maintenance, operation of the plant, etc., the commission felt that a rate increase was necessary. This is the first increase in more than two years.

Residents with questions should call the sewer commission at 781-383-4116.

Scituate animal shelter fund raising is in high gear

Committee needs $534K by February

By Jillian Fennimore
JFENNIMO@CNC.COM

Fundraising is in full force for Scituate Animal Shelter's 3A Farm Fund.

And efforts have been split into four phases in order to raise enough money to buy the property for the building's new location.

"All hands on deck," said Nancy Testa, chair of the Friends of the Scituate Shelter. "We are moving forward."

After selectmen gave shelter supporters the go-ahead in June to pursue the purchase of a parcel of land off Mann Lot Road and the Route 3A Farm, a capital campaign committee was formed in order to raise the funds needed —a total of $534,000 by next February.

"It's a scary thing," Testa said about the payment deadline in accordance to the land-owner's request. "But it's an opportunity of a lifetime for the shelter."

The Scituate shelter—currently located on the Driftway— is a no-kill facility and has accepted and cared for animals from Scituate, Norwell, Hingham, Cohasset and Hull since its inception in 1991. According to campaign committee member Judy Enright, the shelter was built with a bequest from Eleanor R. Haughy to the town of Scituate, "without costing the taxpayers a cent."

This month the capital campaign committee has begun to reach out to those who have a connection with the shelter, whether it's been through adopting a pet, giving a previous donation or just being a shelter supporter.

According to Testa, as part of a four-phase outreach program, they are first sending out informational packets to nearly 2,500 supporters on the shelter's list, asking for their help with the Farm Fund.

In the upcoming months, homes in Scituate and surrounding towns will hold cocktail parties where shelter volunteers will present a video detailing the shelter's mission for the new year.

And just in time for Halloween, the campaign committee will host a "Bark and Howl" gala at the River Club in October.

Their efforts will end with a mass-mailing to those on the list who wish to make a final contribution. Naming opportunities inside the new shelter will also be available to interested donors who can purchase engraved wall tiles or for a larger donation have one of the facilities rooms, or kennels named after them.

"(Our supporters) are the only way we could have done this," said Testa, who has high hopes for reaching their fundraising goal.

The plan for the shelter involves building a new, 2,500-square foot facility on the four-acre parcel of land. The much larger shelter building will offer more room for medical care and evaluation of the animals, along with larger kennels, a training area and a fenced in walking path with an outdoor exercise area. The total cost of the project is about $1.6 million, but the shelter committee has already raised $300,000 and hopes to bring in $375,000 from the sale of the current Driftway facility.

A preliminary conceptual drawing of the proposed Scituate Animal Shelter to be located on a parcel of land at the Route 3A Farm.

Another $25,000 for the project will come through the Animal Shelter trust fund.

"It gives us open space and more room to do things," Testa said of the proposed new facility which will have greater visibility with it's location on Route 3A. The new shelter will also offer more parking for volunteers and visitors at the shelter – four times more than what the current facility can accommodate.

The decision to make the move from the Driftway was spurred on by the MBTA Greenbush rail construction going on all around the shelter which has made it nearly impossible for the volunteers to walk dogs or park their cars when helping out. Scituate Animal Control Officer Kimberly Stewart and several other shelter supporters brought the plan to selectmen last June and remain hopeful they'll be able to raise the remaining funds they'll need by February.

Those interested in making a contribution to the Scituate Animal Shelter's 3A Farm Fund can send a donation to the Scituate Animal Shelter, 3A Farm Fund, PO Box 823, Scituate MA. 02066. For more information call the shelter at 781-545-8703 or visit the Web site at www.town.scituate.ma.us/animalshelter.

Support our troops

While we were covering an event next door in Hingham on Tuesday, we were touched by something Hingham Police Chief Steven Carlson said.

By the way of background, Hingham Veterans Agent Michael Cunningham organized a fishing trip out of Hingham harbor for 17 soldiers who were wounded or injured in Iraq or Afghanistan. The men and women are recuperating at a special clinic at Hanscom Air Force Base near Concord.

The event was a small, yet very tangible gesture for these troops. And Cunningham said the look on the soldiers' faces as they returned to the harbor after a day of fishing said it all.

When Carlson, a Vietnam combat veteran, made his remarks in a ceremony before the fishing trip got under way – he noted that a "welcome home" was not a privilege he and his fellow soldiers, marines and airmen, were afforded during that divisive era. [We want to note that Carlson also talked of what an honor it was for him to be asked to address the soldiers who were standing at ease in front of him.]

We realize opinions are divided on the war in Iraq and Afghanistan. Much of the news is negative. Any positives are being under-reported.

Even within families, opinions can differ and become emotional. The truth is we may never again see the kind of patriotic fervor that united the country during WWII. War is different, reporting on the conflicts is different, and people are far more cynical about government and world affairs.

But with that being said, we should never repeat what those in the US Armed Forces felt and heard upon returning from Vietnam when many Americans expressed their anger about the war by attacking the troops themselves.

We hope that all of us can agree to support our troops and thank them for their service whether or not we agree with President Bush.

We think Tuesday's fishing trip in Hingham went a long way toward making a handful of soldiers feel as if "thank you and welcome home" had some real meaning. We hope similar heartfelt efforts continue at here at home and across the country.

Last Wednesday (Aug. 17), roughly100 people gathered on Cohasset Common, as they also did by the Iron Horse statue at Hingham Harbor, and in communities across the country, to show their support for Gold Star Mother Cindy Sheehan. Those at the vigils have strong feelings about our country's involvement in Iraq. Although we couldn't attend, we believe those who participated support our troops. Some believe the war in Iraq was wrong from the start and rather than stay the course, they want our troops home now.

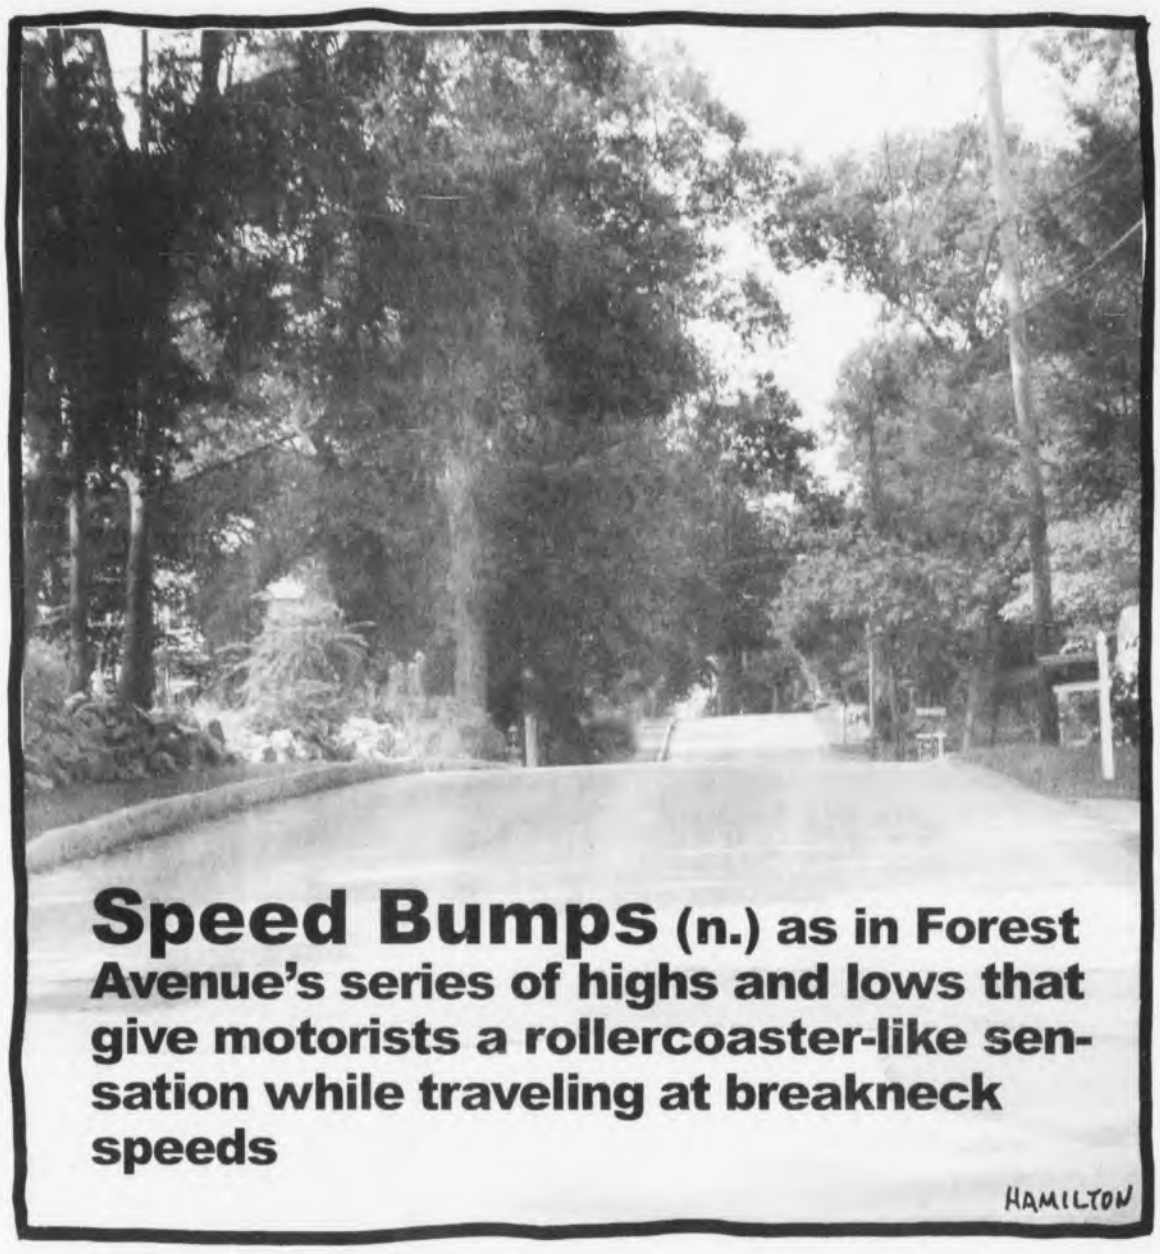
The greatest part of our democracy here in America is that we have the freedom to express our views.

But it's critical during this difficult time that we continue to respect each other's feelings. That's one way to truly honor our men and women in uniform.

Traffic concerns

With Cedarmere, the Cook Estate and Avalon on the horizon and some subdivisions, such as the 14 homes planned off Beechwood Street on the Nadar property – traffic is going to increase exponentially.

Now add the train station and more development along Rte. 3A and there could be some gridlock in the town's future. The unfortunate side effect of traffic tie-ups is motorists often decide to take the "back route" along quiet residential streets.



We're not sure there's an easy answer but we do think it's important to get a jump on what the potentially tricky traffic points could be.

You may wonder why we sometimes talk about Hingham in our editorials. That's because at the Cohasset Mariner and Hingham Journal share the same editor, who believes Cohasset could learn from what's happening right next door. We can tell you from personal experience that traffic is ruining some neighborhoods in Hingham. There is almost nothing that affects the quality of life more profoundly than having your neighborhood turn into the Indianapolis 500.

Hingham has established traffic study committees to try to get a handle on the problem; in the meantime neighborhoods are rising up and begging the selectmen in that town for help and action.

Let's get some committed citizens on board now with some traffic expertise to figure out how to deter speeding cars and trucks from Cohasset's residential streets.

Parker Avenue, which is the access route to Bailey's Creek, is a microcosm of the larger issue. Hats off to those neighbors for making their concerns known. Seasonal speed bumps may be a hassle, but if it's feasible to install them – then we say "go for it!"

Speed Bumps (n.) as in Forest Avenue's series of highs and lows that give motorists a rollercoaster-like sensation while traveling at breakneck speeds

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Rec Dept. thankful for support

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Recreation Department will soon conclude another summer of services for children and adults.

The Recreation Commission and staff wish to thank the many individuals and families who participated in a multitude of programs, events and activities during the summer as well as over the past years.

We are also indebted to many other town departments and individuals who have lent their time, effort and experience in support of our services. Without their day to day help, the success of our programs would be severely compromised.

Thank you to Bill Griffin, Town Manager, Carl Sestito, Superintendent - DPW; Brian Adams-Building Maintenance Division; Andy Swanson, Tree, Park and Cemetery Division-and the Cohasset School Department; Dr. Denise M. Walsh, Superintendent, and the administrative and custodial staffs of the School Department.

Our very sincere thanks to the Cohasset Police Department, James Hussey, Chief of Police, and the Cohasset Police Association, for their magnamous efforts and donations keeping our summer safe, as well as fun. Thanks also to the Cohasset Fire Department, Roger Lincoln, Fire Chief for their support and involvement with the children and programs.

David Wadsworth, Curator of Museums is thanked for providing our Playground Program youngsters with tours of our Maritime Museum.

In addition, thank you to Cohasset Plaza Liquors, Shaw's, and a special thank you to Stop and Shop Supermarkets for their donations to the Playground Program's annual barbecue. We are indebted and sincerely thank this year's Playground Sponsors:

Goodwin Graphics, Pilgrim Co-Operative The Good Sport Inc., Anderson Fuel, Kristine A Grazioso, D.M.D., South Shore Music Circus, Stop and Shop Supermarket, American Legion, Cohasset Veterans of Foreign War, Cohasset Collision Center, Bernard's, MKR Building Solutions, The Junk Guy and JJ's Dairy Hut.

At the risk of missing anyone who has supported our efforts, as the list is long each year, we offer both apology and gratitude.

John M. Worley, Director
Cohasset Recreation Commission

Reservist returns to yard work

TO THE EDITOR:

I personally owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. Campbell for pointing out a failure to properly maintain hedges and landscaping; I must confess I am guilty of such inconsideration.

In my defense I should say my wife was unable to do it herself, since she was raising three children under five, one of which started walking two months ago.

Where was I? Until five days ago I was a mobilized reservist in the United States Navy, recalled for those "national and global issues" people in a survey "hadn't thought of for hours." The pay cut I took to serve my country put hiring a landscaper a few points down on the priority list, after the mortgage, food, clothing, etc.

Rest assured, Mr. Campbell, I am hard at work getting my yard in order before I return to my regular job. Please continue to provide us with your unsolicited wisdom. Gotta run — my five-year-old said my break is over and the mower awaits!

Knitting group – Meets Monday evenings, 6:30 to 8:30 p.m., in the Historical Room. Open to all who love to knit or just have an interest in knitting. Bring a knitting project and join like-minded friends each week. For more information call Mary Coughlin, 781-383-1348.

Art exhibits – The works of Pembroke artist Brooks Kelly are on exhibit at the library through Aug. 31. Working in acrylic and collage, his bold, colorful style is often tinged with humor. Award-winning Marshfield artist, Maureen Brookfield will be exhibiting her watercolors at the library from Sept. 1 through Oct. 30.

Book discussion group – Will meet Thursday, Sept. 29 at 10 a.m. for coffee and discussion of "Wild Swans" by Jung Chang. Advance registration required. Call Gayle Walsh, 781-383-1348.

Thank You Friends – A big thank you to the Friends of the Cohasset Library for their generous support of the summer reading program. Their support allowed us to provide seven free Tuesday evening family performances, four toddler music programs with MamaSteph, weekly reading incentives, and "Going Places @ your library" backpacks for 350 summer reading participants.

Backpacks – All students who have successfully completed their summer reading goal should turn in their reading logs and pick up a "Going Places @ your library" backpack by the end of August.

Balance is possible at Sandy Beach

NATURAL VIEW

JIM SHIPSKY

The Department of Environmental Protection reached an agreement with the Town of Cohasset and the Sandy Beach Association (SBA) June 14, 2005, concerning the sand dunes at Sandy Beach. It's an odd agreement. In it DEP states as facts that Sandy Beach is a coastal barrier beach, and the dunes that were formerly located on the beach side of the parking lot and the Atlantic Avenue side of the parking lot were coastal dunes protected under the Wetlands Protection Act.

However, in the agreement, the Town and SBA assert these were not dunes, but "linear sand features" not protected by environmental law. Having agreed to disagree on these most basic of terms, the parties next agreed on a beach management plan.

• The dune between the parking lot and the beach: SBA has agreed to allow sand to accumulate on both sides of the boulders separating the parking lot from the beach, within well-defined dimensions. Sand accumulating beyond these boundaries may be removed and placed on the beach. No planting of native species is stipulated, nor any requirement to protect "volunteer" plant species from trampling by beach-goers anywhere.

For those who prefer natural beaches, with native plants and wildlife, this agreement is a disaster.

• The dune between the parking lot and Atlantic Avenue: The Town has agreed to restore this "linear sand feature", and to mark the parking lot pavement to guide equipment operators in collecting sand in this area. Two months have passed and the Town has failed to comply. (The agreement mentions deadlines for compliance, but omitted to set any.) The agreement also fails to define "restore". Usually restore means to make it the way it was before. In this case restoration would mean putting the sand back and planting native plant species to anchor the sand. The management plan that is part of the agreement states that SBA and the Town DPW shall "allow sand to accumulate". Another oddity: beach erosion as a form of restoration. The agreement allows the Town to remove any sand from this area that accumulates in excess of well-defined dimensions.

• A five-year study: SBA and the Town have agreed to perform a five-year study to evaluate current and potential beach management practices. This study may be paid for by Community Preservation funds approved at a previous Town Meeting.

For those who believe Sandy Beach should be managed to maximize its square footage of well-groomed sand, this agreement will come as good news. For those who prefer natural beaches, with native plants and wildlife, this agreement is a disaster.

I come down on the side of Nature. When I go to a beach, I love seeing American dune grass, beach pea, rosa rugosa, dusty miller—all those beautiful plants and wildlife one sees at the beach in Hull or Duxbury. I feel we are in a time when it is crucial for us humans to learn to live in harmony with Nature, and stop trying to control and dominate it.

Balance is possible. The part of a beach from the primary dune to the water can be used intensively without harming it. What a pounding nor'easter can't hurt a few thousand beach-goers can't hurt either. On the other hand, the plants that anchor dunes are extremely vulnerable to trampling and must be protected. This sort of balance demonstrated at Sandy Beach could be a valuable lesson for Cohasset children. And adults?

Topping off the tank at $3

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

In Germany after the first World War, inflation was so bad that employers used to pay their employees twice a day and then give them time off to go shopping before the next round of price increases hit them.

Or so I was told.

Why, only 10 years ago, according to the American Almanac, the average price of gasoline in Massachusetts was 83.2 cents a gallon...

It's not quite that bad yet in the good old U.S. of A., but don't bet that pretty soon the boss won't be paying you at noon and again at five o'clock and then letting you take a half hour or so off to hunt up a place to top off your tank.

The last time I looked the price of gas was edging — edging, hell, it was dashing — toward the $3 a gallon mark, which, if your Chevy Tahoe has a 30-gallon tank, makes a fill up cost $90. I used to buy whole used cars for that.

GasBuddy.com, a web site whose only function apparently is to keep track of gas prices daily across the country, reported one day last week that 19 of the 92,792 gas stations nationwide were selling unleaded for $2.999 and up.

Four of them are on Nantucket, where, the Herald reported, folks are ferrying their cars off-island to fill their tanks and still coming out ahead on the spread sheet.

When I was young and we covered the earth, I used fill up the old '39 Plymouth at Fred Grant's Shell Station, hand Fred a five and get enough change back for more than a few dime beers at Tom's Tap.

It seems like only yesterday — actually, it was May, 2004 — when the price of gas cracked the $2 a gallon barrier, which, to the business pages, was like the four-minute mile and Babe Ruth's 60 homer mark was to the sports section.

Why, only 10 years ago, according to the American Almanac, the average price of gasoline in Massachusetts was 83.2 cents a gallon and we were bitching and moaning that pretty soon it would be a dollar and wouldn't that be absurd?

Remember the days of the OPEC embargo in the mid-70s when Dick Nixon was president and the price of gas at the pump soared from 35-cents to 55-cents a gallon?

And those of us that go back farther than that when the War Production Board instituted gas rationing and those with nothing better to do got an "A" card to stick in the car window and a book of stamps, entitling you to three gallons a month.

If you had business that required you to use your car, you might be able to finagle a "B" or a "C" book which entitled you to more fuel and touched off some of the finest wheeling and dealing outside of Wall Street.

A little sharp trading or the passing of pictures of dead presidents could, and sometimes did, turn an "A" book into a "C" book.

How do you think that carload of high school seniors was able to skip school and get to New York that time in Gordon Stovall's car?

But don't tell.

Valuable lessons about mercury

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

When "quicksilver" was coined, the charming old name for mercury hid a deadly threat which caused serious mischief in many unknowing people. There is evidence that several famous scientists, such as Isaac Newton suffered from mercury poisoning. The term "mad as a hatter" came from the use of mercury by members of that trade to shape the felt used in making hats.

Now that we know more about it, mercury is less of a threat for several reasons: Publicity has substantially reduced use of mercury thermometers. Researchers have identified several new ways compounds of mercury enter the human body and the epidemiology (the study of the spread of diseases within and between populations) of mercury illness has matured with advances in detection and treatment.

Fortunately, elemental mercury from any source is not absorbed from the stomach and will not cause any poisoning in a healthy person. In a healthy person, slippery swallowed mercury will roll into the stomach, out in to the bowels and will be quickly eliminated without causing any symptoms. Nor is it well absorbed across the skin, so skin contact is not likely to cause mercury poisoning, especially with a brief one-time exposure. Further, mercury is too heavy to be contained by a cut. Merely washing the wound well will eliminate the mercury from the wound.

In the general population, the main source of mercury poisoning is the ingestion of mercury- contaminated food, usually fish. When lake, river or ocean water is contaminated with methyl-mercury compounds, the mercury accumulates and magnifies in the flesh of the fish. Organic mercury concentrations can be more than 1,000 times greater in the fish than in the surrounding water. People who eat fish as a main component of their diet may be at risk. Fish from the grocery store may contain mercury. Farm salmon contains more mercury than wild caught salmon. Shark, swordfish, king mackerel, and tilefish contain high levels of mercury. Albacore ("white") tuna has more mercury than canned light tuna. Five of the most commonly eaten fish that are low in mercury are shrimp, canned light tuna, salmon, pollock, and catfish. When cooking salmon, a good chef sears the fish in a pan which causes it to stick to the pan. He then slides the fish onto a plate. Seared properly, the accompanying gray fat layer which contains the most mercury, stays in the pan with the skin.

In the general population, the main source of mercury poisoning is the ingestion of mercury-contaminated food, usually fish.

Inhalation of elemental mercury vapors is a cause of toxicity, as mercury is well absorbed by the lungs. Problems by inhalation occur from a large one-time or a long-term exposure. After long-term inhalation exposure, the nervous system is the main target of toxicity. Long-term symptoms may occur within weeks but usually develop over a period of years. Psychiatric effects are also seen after long-term exposure and can, for example, result from repeated exposures to mercury-containing latex paint fumes. Organic mercury compounds are found in a variety of products including medicines where it is used as fungicides and anti-bacterials.

If your dwelling is exposed to liquid mercury, it is necessary to remove it or, for a large spill, have it removed immediately.

Disposal

For any spill more than a thermometer, pick up the mercury with an eyedropper or scoop up beads with a piece of heavy paper (e.g., playing cards, index cards). Wide sticky tape such as duct tape can also be used to pick up any glass particles and mercury beads. Never use household cleaning products to clean the spill, particularly products that contain ammonia or chlorine which react violently with mercury, releasing a toxic gas. Powdered sulfur (which can be purchased at garden supply stores) can be used to bind any remaining mercury. Never use an ordinary household vacuum cleaner to clean up mercury. Vacuuming vaporizes and increases the concentration of mercury in the air that can result in poisoning. Place the mercury, contaminated instruments (dropper/heavy paper) and any broken glass in a succession of three plastic zipper bags, tightly sealing each bag with tape. Place the bags in a wide-mouth, sealable plastic container and take it to the Board of Health.

Cohasset holds candlelight vigil

Text by Linda Keller

A cross-section of people participated in the vigil that was held on Cohasset Common and organized locally by Amy Martin. Upwards of 100 people stood around the pond silently. A church bell tolled solemnly. It was very beautiful and very moving.

Left: Cindy Sheehan, whose son Casey was killed in Iraq, asked supporters to start candlelight vigils in their communities to remind people of the terrible price of war.

Left: People of all ages participated in the candlelight vigil on Wednesday evening (Aug. 17) to silently acknowledge the sacrifices made by Gold Star Mother Cindy Sheehan, her son Casey, and the more than 1,800 who have given their lives in Iraq, and their families.

Stable unemployment rate can be looked at two ways

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

In a state searching for ways to bring back true prosperity, last week's unemployment figures provided reason for hope, but cause for reasonable doubt too.

It was a familiar pattern in this long period of ambiguous numbers and halting performance, both nationally and in the Bay State. The state's unemployment rate stayed at 4.7 percent, a third of a point below a national rate that also remained static.

On one hand, this is in no way an economic crisis. It simply can't be, with unemployment at 4.7 percent; full employment is often defined as 4 percent, and there are plenty of people at the State House who remember the early 90s, when 8 percent represented progress, not to mention the mid-70s, when it seemed certain this would never again be a successful state economically.

But on the other hand, the state doesn't seem to be making progress – the number of jobs is growing no faster than the number of workers coming into the labor force, and the departure of both people and high-profile companies has analysts and policy makers worried.

...the number of jobs is growing no faster than the number of workers coming into the labor force, and the departure of both people and high-profile companies has analysts and policy makers worried.

Thus it was that the Legislature enacted and the administration touted the sales tax holiday – one day in 2004, and a full weekend this year. Results of that weekend were encouraging – retailers said the marketplace was busy as Christmas. But leaders know that cranking up the action at the malls on one August weekend is hardly the same thing as keeping business in the state and workers on the payroll in the long run.

Ultimately, economic performance is based on psychology. Well, yes, there's availability of capital and other fundamentals, but even many of those derive from confidence. Consumers spend when they feel confident about their employment situation. Business people invest when they feel confident consumers are willing to spend. It's all about jobs, which is why a long period of flat unemployment keeps the economy stuck at "okay," as it is now.

So policy makers wanted to "send a message" about the Massachusetts economy with the gimmicky holiday – and message-sending is about psychology. Similarly, the Big Three on Beacon Hill – governor, House Speaker, Senate President – all have economic stimulus packages on the table or on the drawing board. Gov. Romney was in Worcester last week to talk up a lynchpin of his stimulus plan: changes in commercial permitting requirements at the state level. While these packages will all be limited by the reality that state government can't really affect macroeconomics, they will be driven by awareness of how much difference it makes in the business climate when CEOs perceive that the government is at least making a full effort to help and not to hinder.

It's not a terribly novel thought, but so important it's worth restating – the numbers are fine nowadays, but something doesn't feel right. Whatever it is – gas prices, housing inflation, the threat of terror – people don't feel confident commensurate with the statistics, and the limited confidence keeps the state from coming all the way back from its torpor. Government employment dropped last month, but plenty of people on Beacon Hill are still busy looking for solutions.

• Georges Bank report discouraging for fishing industry — One trouble spot in the local economy refuses to improve, and it happens to be the historic fulcrum of the state's economic life. A new report from the National Marine Fisheries Services finds a 25 percent drop in the weight of the cod population in Georges Bank. The finding is a blow to state and federal marine officials, who'd hoped controversial shutdowns and limits on the region's catch would lead to a rebound in fish stocks and weights.

• Conservation Law Foundation appeals fall river natural gas ruling CLF says — the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission erred June 30 when it approved the siting of an LNG terminal in Fall River. In its appeal to FERC, the foundation cited water quality and fish health in the Taunton River, and the safety risk to Fall River residents from explosions. CLF claims the ruling violates the National Environmental Policy Act and other federal laws.

• Silver Line takes a detour MBTA — officials had described funding for the final phase of the rapid-bus route under the federal New Starts program as a hard-earned victory. But last week, they asked to be removed from the list of projects eligible for that funding, for now at least. The request came a day after State Environment Affairs Secretary Stephen Pritchard formally asked the T which of three proposed routes it plans to use to complete the Silver Line. Pritchard's approval is needed for the transit line to advance. The coming third phase of the Silver Line is intended to link its first two components, but all of the routes so far proposed have encountered community opposition. MBTA General Manager Daniel Grabauskus said getting the project's status changed now optimizes the chances of preserving the funding for construction once planners decide (literally) which route to take.

• UMass subcommittee approves $2.26 billion building plan — About $1 billion is for repairs or upgrades of existing facilities – the rest is for new buildings and infrastructure. It is the largest capital plan in the university's history by a factor of two – but it remains just that, a plan. Only 75 percent of the revenue needed for the capital plan has been specifically identified, UMass President Jack Wilson told the Administration and Finance Subcommittee. Still, he said, "This is not a wish list, it's a needs list." The full UMass Board of Trustees is due to vote on the capital plan next Wednesday.

• Romney's civil-service policies take a hit as workers reinstated — The governor, like his predecessors, has flouted or modified many of the procedures and tenets of the old civil service system, saying collective bargaining accomplishes the same goals and civil service is rigid and expensive. But the Civil Service Commission took exception to the layoffs of three tax examiners, the Globe reported last week, and as it ordered them rehired, issued what's tantamount to a warning to the executive branch that some civil service provisions meant to protect qualified senior workers must still be observed. It's not clear how far-reaching the effects of the ruling will be, but it could be the first step in a restoration of civil service being imposed on a reluctant administration.

• Weld sounding serious about N.Y. gubernatorial bid — The Boston Globe reported that former Gov. William Weld is sounding out Republican activists in New York about running to succeed George Pataki. Weld's a partner in the investment firm Leeds Weld and Co.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE: BHRC records local representatives and senators' votes on three roll calls from prior sessions. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.

$1 MILLION FOR PARENT-CHILD HOME PROGRAM (H 4200)

House 153-0, Senate 37-0, override Gov. Romney's $1 million veto reduction (from $2 million to $1 million) in funding for the Parent-Child Home Program. The program provides home-based language and literacy services for at-risk children and their parents who are not able to travel to a site to obtain the services. Override supporters said that this program has been successful in working with low-income families and parents who often do not have good reading skills themselves or cannot afford the necessary educational books and toys to help their children learn to read and communicate. They noted that studies prove that there is a strong relationship between language development in early childhood and later success when the child is in school. In his veto message, Romney said that he reduced the funding to the amount that is consistent with his original budget recommendation for this program. (A "Yes" vote is for the additional $1 million).

$1 MILLION FOR EARLY INTERVENTION PROGRAM (H 4200)

House 152-0, Senate 36-1, override Gov. Romney's $1 million veto reduction (from $30.8 million to $29.8 million) for the early intervention program. The program provides early intervention for families of children up to three years of age who have developmental difficulties because of health or environmental conditions. Override supporters said that the reduced funding would hurt this vital program that assists these children at an early age and helps them grow and attain the skills to increase their development. They noted that the program serves the child and family in their natural environments, including family homes, child care centers and community play groups in order to improve development by encouraging the child's participation in everyday activities. In his veto message, Romney said that he cut the $1 million because the increased funding for the expansion of this program was not recommended. (A "Yes" vote is for the $1 million. A "No" vote is against the $1 million).

Senator Hedlund	Representative Bradley

$1.5 MILLION FOR HEALTH WORKERS' TRAINING (H 4200)

House 130-20, Senate 37-0, override Gov. Romney's veto of the entire $1.5 million in funding for the career ladder grant program for workers in long term care facilities and home-based care agencies. The program provides grants to long term care facilities for training programs to help workers move to a higher skill level and earn increased wages. Override supporters said this program ensures a high quality of care in these facilities by attracting, training and retaining skilled workers who provide direct care to patients and residents. In his veto message, Romney said that he vetoed the funding because it is not consistent with his original budget recommendation. (A "Yes" vote is for the $1.5 million. A "No" vote is against the $1.5 million)

Senator Hedlund	Representative Bradley

INCREASE LOCAL FINES (S 1168)- The House has sent to the Ways and Means Committee a Senate-approved bill increasing from $300 to $3000 the maximum amount that a city or town is allowed to impose on anyone who violates local ordinances, by-laws and zoning laws. The measure was approved in the Senate without debate and was on the House floor for consideration until a successful motion was made to send it to committee.

STATE EMPLOYEES IN ARMED SERVICES (S 2062)- The House and Senate approved and sent to Gov. Romney a bill extending until September 2008 a current law providing that state employees who are granted a military leave of absence for active military service after September 11, 2001, continue to receive their base state salary reduced by their military pay. The measure also gives cities, towns and counties the option to provide the same guarantee to local employees. The law was passed in 2003 and is scheduled to expire in September unless it is extended. Supporters say that state employees who risk their lives to defend the nation should not lose money during their service.

HEADPHONES AND BICYCLES (H 1867)- A bill banning the use of headphones while riding a bicycle is being considered by the Public Safety Committee. A hearing on the measure was held in May but the committee has yet to act on the proposal.

LOCAL INCOME TAX (H 2421)- A bill before the Revenue Committee would allow cities and towns to replace the local property tax with a local income tax. The measure was filed by Leonard H. Golder, a private citizen from Stow. The committee held a hearing on the proposal in June but has not yet taken action on it.

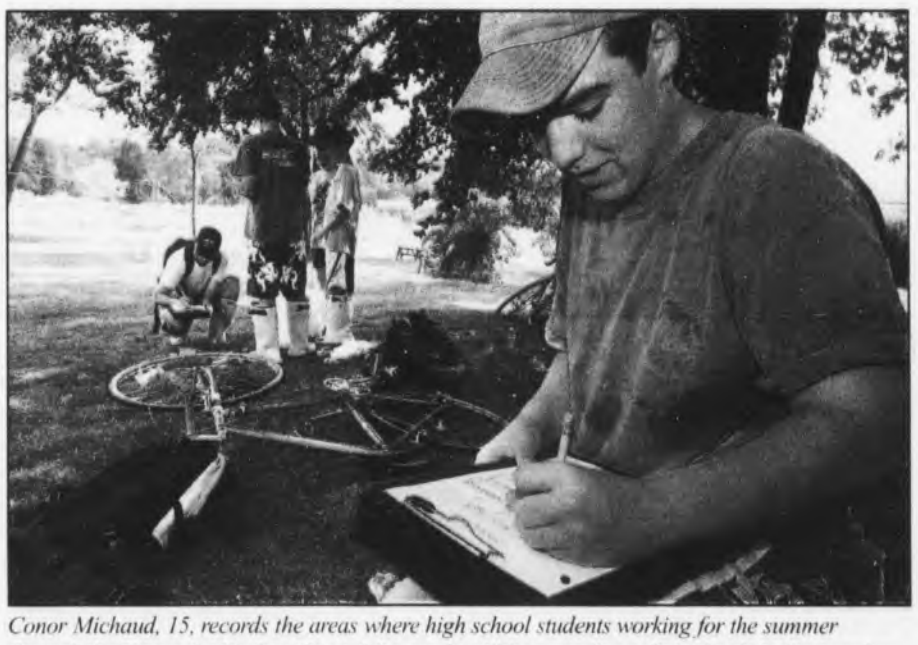
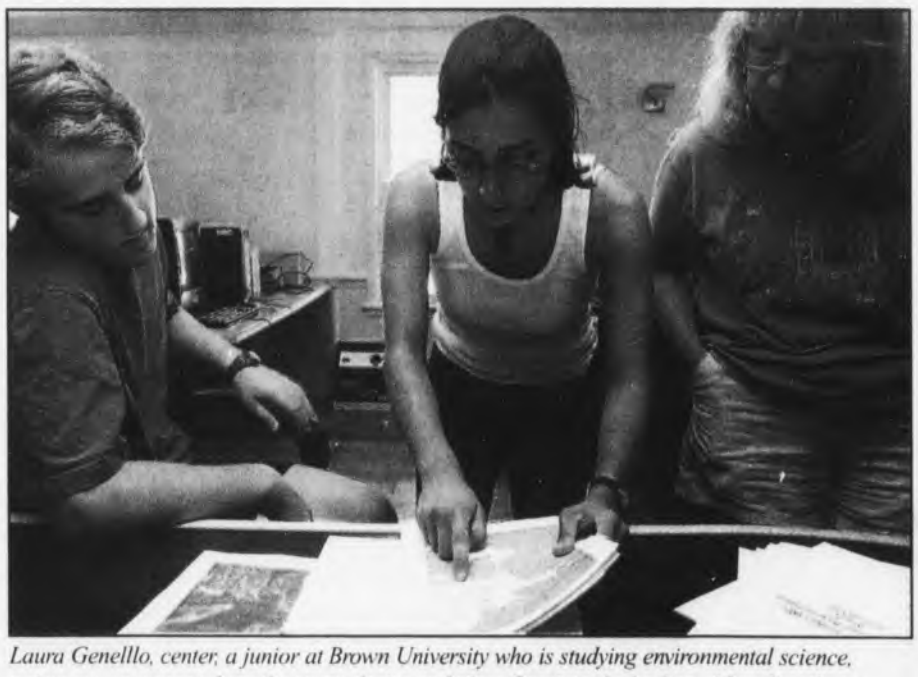
Junior Caren Garber, 16, left, and junior Lara Novak, 16, take a variety of measurements in the water by the Center for Student Coastal Research off Parker Avenue. Measurements were taken at the water's surface, at 5 feet, and at 10 feet. The measurements include water temperature, conductivity, salinity, dissolved oxygen, and dissolved oxygen saturation.

Science teacher David Ames, right, shows high school students Conor Michaud, 15, Margaret Goodwin, 14, Colin Dignam, 15, and Matt Burgess, 15, how to extract water with a sipper from the salt marsh. The students were in the marshes located along Border and Elm streets to test salinity levels, as part of research they are conducting through the Center for Student Coastal Research.



Discovering what Cohasset harbors

Young marine biologists at work



Cohasset High School 10th-grade student Matt Burgess, 15, tries to draw water from the salt marshes along Elm and Border streets, using a sipper. Burgess, and other high school students, are researching the salinity levels in the marsh, as part of a program through the Center for Student Coastal Research, located off Parker Avenue in the former Hagerty House.

Conor Michaud, 15, records the areas where high school students working for the summer through the Center for Student Coastal Research, will be recording salinity levels in the marshes by Border and Elm streets. The group is being led by high school science teacher David Ames.

Laura Genelllo, center, a junior at Brown University who is studying environmental science, points out on a map where the storm drains and pipes flow into the harbor, either directly or through tributaries to Cohasset High School senior Chris Reynolds, 17, and Christine Harris, a project adviser from the First Herring Brook Watershed Initiative. The students, who are working for the Center for Student Coastal Research over the summer, led a presentation on the bacterial count in the harbor during the summer, to the harbor health committee last Thursday, Aug. 18. The group is studying whether runoff affects the increased bacterial count in the harbor. Genello worked at the CSCR as a junior and senior at CHS. She has returned to serve as a project coordinator, leading the bacterial studies in Cohasset Harbor and the Gulf River.

At left: Aisling Guinee, 16, updates data points for a graph of enterococci readings throughout Cohasset harbor during the summer. She is one of many students working on water quality projects over the summer through the Center for Student Coastal Research. The students presented their findings to the harbor health committee Thursday, Aug. 18. Students are trying to determine whether there is a correlation between rainfall and bacteria levels in the harbor. Readings after the Aug. 14 storm seemed to indicate there is a correlation, as one site in the harbor was suddenly home to over 2,000 colonies of enterococci, where they had been none in the past.

Swimming for the same team

Cohasset, Scituate High Schools join forces

By Mary Jane Hanron
CORRESPONDENT

Despite the recent waves of relentless heat, the final days of August approach, as does the beginning of another school year.

For youngsters in the area involved in competitive swimming, an exciting opportunity draws near. Plans are underway for the towns of Cohasset and Scituate to collaborate in the development of a new high school swim team.

According to Cohasset High School Athletic Director Ron Ford, a swim team for the school's athletic program is not a new concept.

"We had a swimming program for a number of years, but after a while, due to various reasons it wasn't possible to maintain it," he explained. "This year, it's different, though.

"There is a great deal of interest and enthusiasm, the numbers of students hoping to participate is large and there is strong support and dedication from parents in the area. They have been working hard at raising awareness and planning to make this happen."

Ford explained Scituate would be the "host school." He said his role in the venture would be an administrative one. He would manage scheduling and logistics for the teams to travel, practice and compete in the region.

A committee of parents from the two towns has been meeting during the summer to find innovative ways to bring this project to fruition. According to plans, the two high schools would form a coeducational swim/dive team for the academic year 2005-2006. In accordance with school athletic categories, swimming is considered a winter sport, thus the team would be active from approximately November through February. It would belong to the Patriot League and compete against teams from Hanover, Duxbury, Randolph, Pembroke and Silver Lake.

The parent group includes those with children who swim on community teams in the summer, as well as parents of children not yet eligible to be in the high school program but anxious that a strong and well run team be in place for the future when their kids are ready for high school.

Sue De Angelo of Scituate spoke of the importance of this endeavor.

"These kids love swimming

Cohasset's Mamme Daley (left) and Scituate's Tony DeAngelo will be teammates this winter on the newly formed join swimming team between Cohasset and Scituate High Schools.

We have several opportunities this upcoming sports season to cover games and write stories about the high school teams, as well as youth and recreational sports in town. This is a great way for those interested in exploring a career in journalism to get some experience and clips, or for someone who just likes sports to take their interest to a different level.

Those interested should be prepared to write one story per week and be able to adhere to weekly deadlines. If you are interested, contact sports editor Mark Goodman at (781)837-4577, or via email at mgoodman@cnc.com.

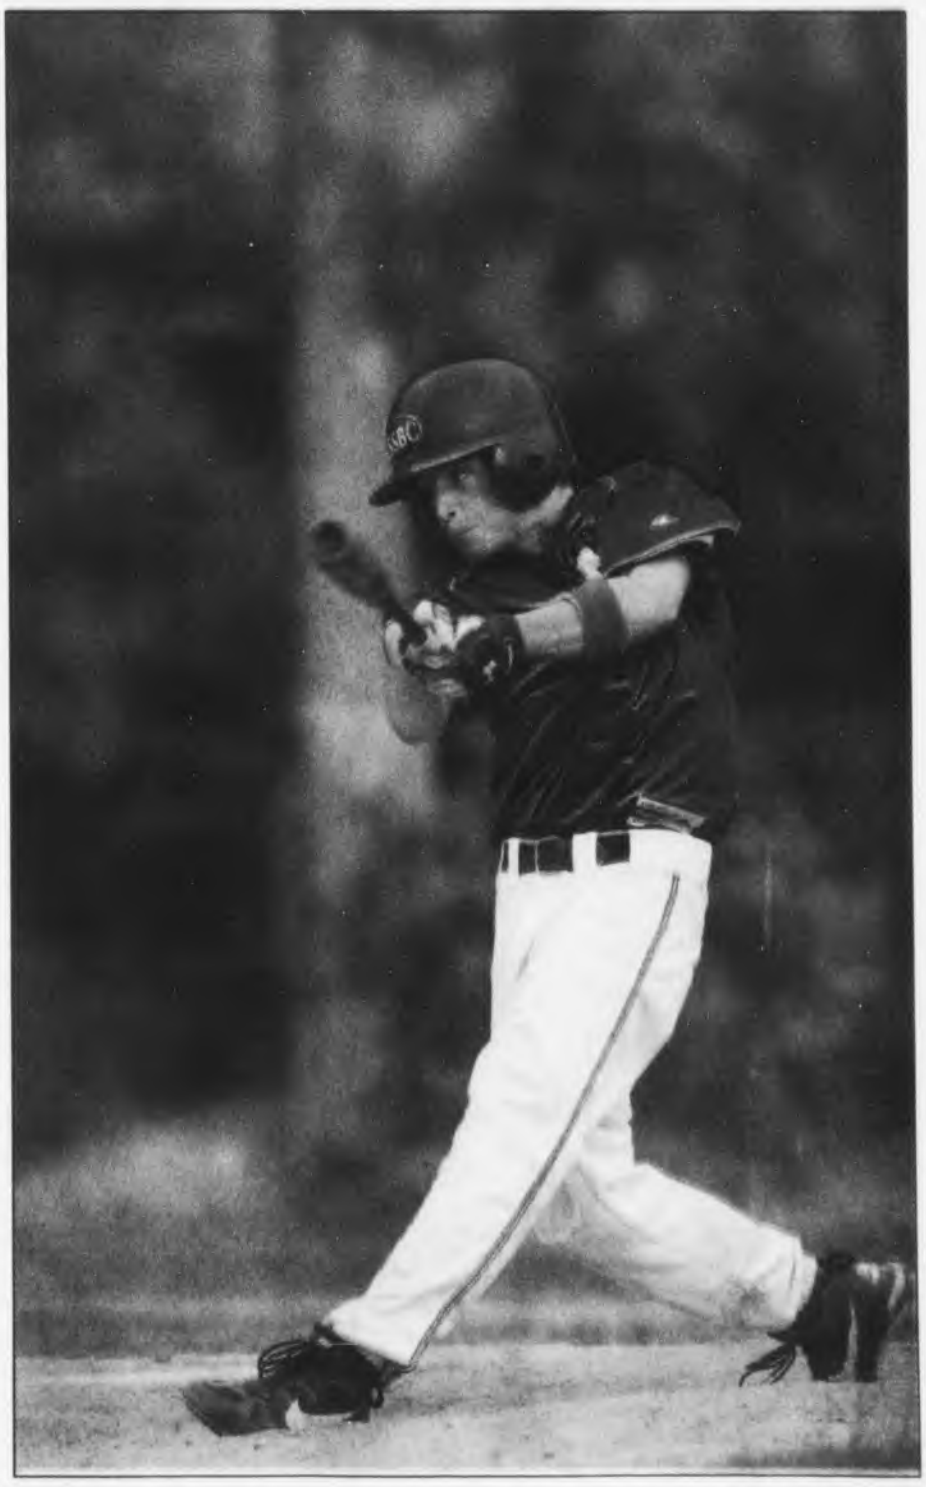
HERE'S LOOKIN' AT YOU

Cohasset's George Baumgarten gears up for last Sunday's Minot's Light Roundabout race, hosted by the Cohasset Maritime Institute. The race's course traversed four-and-a-half miles of open water, starting at the Cohasset breakwater and circling around the lighthouse before making its way back to the breakwater.
The event also featured the Gulf River Roundup, a recreational voyage exploring the Gulf River Estuary. For more photos from the event, see page 16.

Seadogs finish strong in nationals

Cohasset's McCunney helps lead charge

The South Shore Seadogs, winners of the 13-year-old and under AAU New England Super Regional baseball tournament, went to Myrtle Beach, South Carolina in late July to compete in the national finals.



In the week-long event, the Seadogs defeated teams from Virginia, North Carolina, Florida, New Jersey, New Hampshire, Maryland and Tennessee to finish in 7th place among a field of 81 teams.

The Seadogs - consisting of 13 players from the South Shore, including Cohasset resident Robby McCunney - won two straight three-game pool play competitions before succumbing in the quarterfinals and eventually finishing in 7th place.

McCunney, who played shortstop and pitched for the Seadogs, hit an unforgettable 340-foot grand slam over the left center fence against a squad from New Jersey. Since the nationals were held on South Carolina high school fields with fences lining the outfield, home runs were in short supply and included only seven over the entire nationals.

Over the 10 games at the nationals, McCunney hit .458 while stroking two doubles and a triple along with the home run.

and compete during the summer," she said. "It's a wonderful, healthy sport and a skill that everyone should have. They learn about improving their own performances and being part of a team, all while having a lot of fun."

Helen Daley of Cohasset echoed these sentiments.

"It would be ideal to have a situation in which kids are able to swim during the summer months on the various community teams and continue during the school year to participate in organized swimming if that is their chosen sport," she said. "Arrangements have been made for practice time and space at the Weymouth Club, as well as adult coaching and supervision and bus transportation to and from the pool.

"Since the logistics are falling into place, our biggest priority now is fundraising," Daley continued. "Currently, school funding is not available to support this as part of the curriculum, so we are working on various ways to raise the necessary money."

The summer season for Cohasset swimming ended earlier in August for kids from age 6 through teenagers. At the 'End of the Season Banquet' a check from the Board of Directors of the Cohasset Summer Swim Team was presented by Cheryl Lund, president, to the Cohasset High School Swim and Dive Team.

"This generous contribution was the first received and we are so grateful to them for this gesture symbolic of community support," Daley said.

De Angelo said providing swimming opportunities at the high school level will benefit both communities.

"Both Scituate and Cohasset are coastal towns," she said. "Generations of families grow up living by the ocean, spending time at the beaches and around boats. Many families depend on the sea for their livelihood. It can bring only good things to the community when kids are highly trained in swimming skills and well versed in how to act and react safely around the water."

"It can bring only good things to the community when kids are highly trained in swimming skills and well versed in how to act and react safely around the water."
— Susan De Angelo, parent

The mothers mentioned other benefits to the region as time goes by.

"Most residents enjoy the beach themselves, with their families or when they entertain," said De Angelo. She expressed the value of having qualified and adept young people to serve as lifeguards, sailing instructors, and swimming teachers. This will provide summer employment for local youth and perpetuate the safe enjoyment of the ocean for all citizens, she said.

Several fundraising events are scheduled in the next few weeks. A Lobsterfest/Clambake will be held Friday evening, Sept. 9 at 6:30 p.m. at the Cohasset Harbor Inn. Overlooking Cohasset Harbor, this promises to be a fun and festive evening for families, community residents and anyone interested in supporting the swim team.

Students and hopeful members of the swim team are contributing to the cause as well. For a limited time they are selling "Wrist Wraps" which are colorful accessories made from a variety of designer fabrics in array of shades. These fashion statements are made by Janet and Allison Costa and will be available at the Lobsterfest on Sept. 9. They will also be sold at approved school events this fall.

Classmates and teammates are assisting with the sale of these wraps at various places in the community this summer including the Farmers Market on Cohasset Common. Shoppers are welcome to stop by and have the students demonstrate how to wear these whimsical creations, especially how to combine two wraps to form a unique necklace.

Other fundraising activities are being planned, including a "Run to the Beach" from Bretton Woods, New Hampshire to Hampton Beach the weekend of Sept. 16 and 17. Sponsors are being sought to support these dedicated runners.

This venture is not the first time Scituate and Cohasset have collaborated to work for a common goal, especially to benefit youth of the communities. The schools have worked together previously in various academic capacities and also have participated in the French student exchange programs.

Daley and De Angelo expressed one reason this project is so vital and needed by the youth in both towns and for the benefit both communities. They said an appreciation of the water and respect for the power of the ocean is something everyone should have. Bringing the swimming program to a higher level in our communities is a step toward accomplishing this, they said.

Daley referred fondly to a photo of her daughter, Mamme Daley of Cohasset and a friend, Tony De Angelo of Scituate which summarized the program. "I call them the Summer Competitors, Winter Teammates!" she said.

How to help:

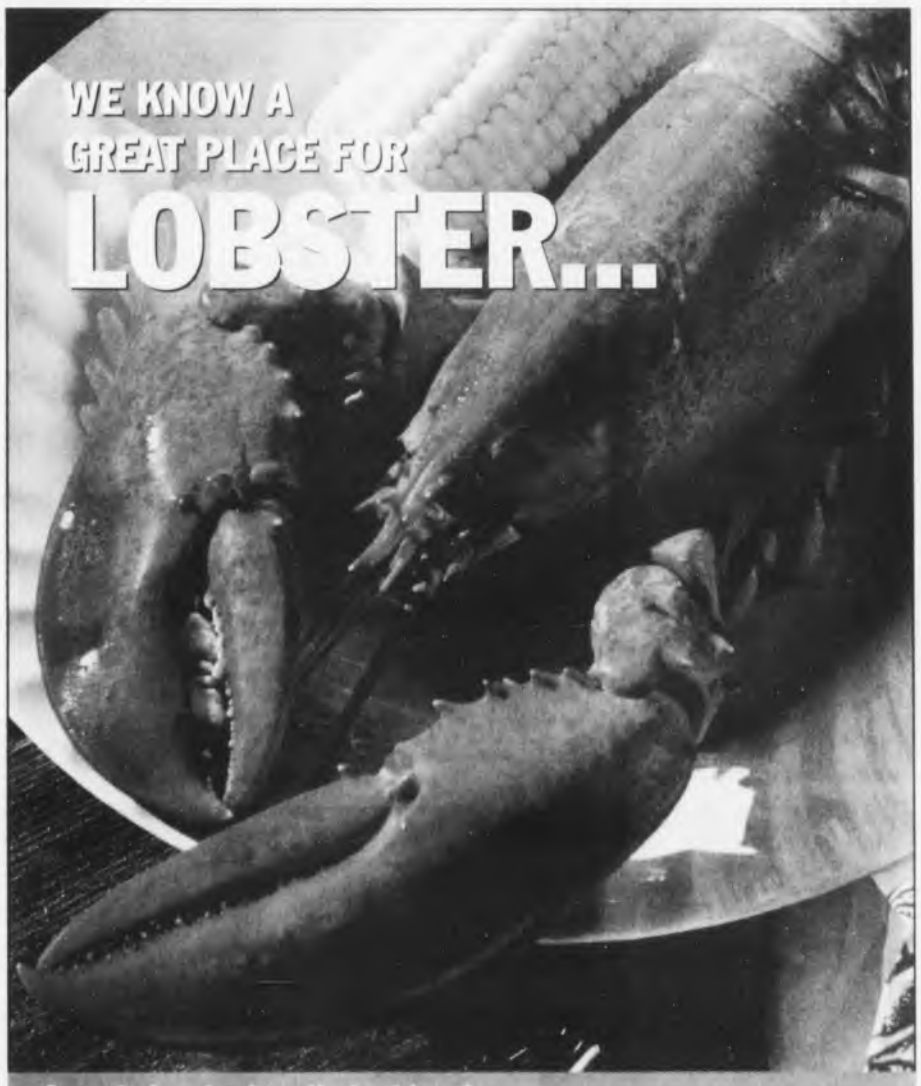
- Purchase tickets to Lobsterfest at Cohasset Harbor Inn Sept. 9. Call Mandy Mahoney: 383-9812 or Helen Daley: 383-2978
- Purchase a "Wrist Wrap," $10 each
- Purchase a few Wraps and begin your Christmas Shopping early!
- Wear your "wrist wrap"! Encourage your friends to buy them, too!
- Be a sponsor for the "Run to the Beach" Sept. 16. Call Helen Daley: 383-2978
- Make a donation; checks payable to "Town of Cohasset/ High School Swim Team Gift Account" or "Friends of Scituate High School Swim Team."

International Basketball Tour

The New England Colonials International Basketball Club invites applications for its '06 Ambassadors team's spring tour to Europe. This tour is open to boys in the 9th and 10th grades who have had significant basketball experience.

This Colonials tour will bring the Ambassador team to Germany, Sweden, and Denmark. As on all the team's tours, Colonials' players will be hosted by the families of their basketball peers at each stop on the tour. Several stipends are available for players with financial need.

Colonials' teams do not hold tryouts and rely on references and an assessment of the applicant's commitment to school, community, and basketball. Founded in 1980, the New England Colonials International Basketball Club is a non-profit program that has as its central purpose the support and encouragement of international friendship and understanding between New England student-athletes and their peers around the world.



For additional information, please contact the New England Colonials at (508) 668-1935 or by E-mail at necolonials@aol.com. Interested players may also apply online at the team's website located at www.NewEnglandColonials.net.

Author to share political anecdotes

Buttonwood Books & Toys hosts Cohasset author Lincoln Palmer Bloomfield, who will discuss "Accidental Encounters With History: and Some Lessons Learned" on Thursday, Sept. 15, 7 p.m., at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Shaw's Plaza, Cohasset. The presentation includes a question and answer period followed by a book signing.

According to the Hot House Press, "Lincoln Palmer Bloomfield's Accidental Encounters with History are exactly that: candid, witty, and often anecdotal observations of the national and political scene, drawing on his extraordinary academic and diplomatic career during the past half-century. Bloomfield's lively 'encounters' are first-hand experiences in the State Department, as a white house staff member, a professor at MIT, and being on the lecture platform in 35 countries…The author's wit, combined with knowledge, result in a truly enjoyable read."

Author and co-author of 11 books on foreign affairs Bloomfield graduated from Harvard, where he also received a doctorate degree. He served in the U.S. Navy, the State Department and as director of global issues for the National Security Council. As a political science professor at MIT, he directed its arms control project and pioneered the development of political gaming.

To order a signed copy call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 or order online at www.buttonwoodbooks.com.

Tri-Chamber golf outing Sept. 15

The Third Annual Tri-Chamber Golf Outing sponsored by the Scituate, Cohasset and Marshfield chambers will be held on Thursday, Sept. 15 at the Widow's Walk Golf Course. A Florida scramble format will include nine holes of golf.

Check in begins at 3 p.m. with a shotgun start at 4 p.m. Dinner and networking at the Pub at Widow's Walk. Cocktails at 6 p.m. and dinner buffet at 7 p.m.

For more information, call 781-545-4000, 781-834-8911 or 781-383-1616. In the event of rain, please call Widow's Walk at 781-544-0032. Donations of goody bags or door prizes are gladly accepted.

Sept. 2 deadline for reserving arts' table

Registrations are now being taken from local artisans wishing to reserve a table for the annual Inly Arts Festival, to be held Sunday, Oct.16, from 1 to 5 p.m., with a pre-festival sale Saturday, Oct. 15, from 4 to 6 p.m., in the Meehan Family Arts Barn at the Inly School in Scituate. The event is open to the public. Wine and hors d'oeuvres will be served.

The Artisan Market, a major focus at the festival, will showcase wares by local artists and Inly faculty and alumni. The rest of the festival will revolve around theatre arts, focusing on sophisticated puppetry and masks – from traditional to avant-garde. In keeping with the mission of the school, activities will be hands-on, interactive, experiential, process-oriented, and educational to encourage people to look at things in new and different ways, and endeavor to integrate life and art.

Festival highlights will include live entertainment by the noted Tanglewood Marionettes, live African drumming, live sculpture painting, and a parade of hand-made masks.

Registration deadline is Friday, Sept. 2. Call Kelly Antonuccio, director of development, 781-545-5544, ext. 119, or email kantonuccio@inlyschool.org.

'In the Game' exhibition at SSAC

The South Shore Art Center is announcing an exhibition of artwork incorporating the theme "In the Game" to be on display Oct. 28 to Dec. 31. The exhibition is open to all game-based art. This includes games as art or about art; art as games or about games. "In the Game" is open to all artists, no geographical restrictions. Work must have been completed since January, 2002, and not previously exhibited at the South Shore Art Center. As this theme is open to wide interpretation, a broad array of work from cutting edge to traditional is welcome. Cash awards will be distributed

William Stover, assistant curator for the Department of Contemporary Art at the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, is the juror for this national exhibition. Stover's recent projects at the MFA include the exhibitions "John Currin Selects" and the first American museum exhibition of British artist Cerith Wyn Evans.

For information or an entry form call 781-383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org.

HSO at Glastonbury

Hingham Symphony Orchestra will perform its traditional last Saturday in August concert on the wide lawn at Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham, Aug. 27 at 4:30 p.m. In the event of rain, the concert will be held in the First Parish Church on Cohasset Common.

On the simple wooden stage, orchestra musicians will perform their favorite solo and small ensemble pieces. The program features selections from Vivaldi's Four Seasons, plus various works for combinations of strings, piano and harpsichord.

This is a family event. Concert goers are encouraged to bring their lawn chairs and a picnic supper. Soft drinks and snacks will be available for purchase.

Tickets are $15 adults; $10 seniors. Children are admitted free. Tickets may be purchased at the gate, or in advance at the Abbey Bookstore, Hingham Public Library, Nobles, and La Petite Maison in Hingham Square. Call 781-740-5694.

Dinner to benefit South Shore Conservatory

The restaurant, 53 South, has been delighting appreciative diners for three years with an imaginative gourmet menu. They are moving to a stunning new location next to Taco Bell in Queen Ann's Corner and will open to the general public September 6.

The owners, Christine and Clark Wickersham, have generously invited all those interested in fine dining on the South Shore to be the first to try their new menu on Thursday, September 1 at 7 p.m.

For a $50 per person donation to South Shore Conservatory, guests can order a three-course dinner: an appetizer, entrée and dessert, to include anything from the entire menu. All proceeds will benefit educational programming at the Conservatory. Alcoholic beverages are an additional charge.

This is a great way to be among the very first to try the new restaurant and support arts education on the South Shore.

Reservations are limited to 60, so if you are interested in attending, call Lanci Valentine at 781-749-7565 ext. 23 or Laura Carleton at 781-934-2731 ext. 14 to reserve your place. Tickets may be charged over the phone, or send a check to One Conservatory Drive, Hingham, MA 02043-2647.

Coffeehouse season to start on Sept. 10

Hingham's Coffeehouse off the Square presents the very humorous singer-songwriter Don White on Saturday, Sept. 10 at 8 p.m.

Don draws on life in his hometown of Lynn to present very funny songs of neighborhood and family life. Yet "funny" only begins to describe his writing, storytelling, singing, body language, and facial theatrics. Broad humor is followed by gentle, playful reminiscences and then by sudden heart-wrenching truths. The mixture is as varied and surprising as life itself. In all, it is great theater from one of a kind.

Don illuminates the human experience through his writing and performing. Whether speaking or setting up the sneakiest punch line of the evening, Don has the hearts of his audience.

The Coffeehouse off the Square is at the Old Ship Parish House at 107 Main St., Hingham Square, just up from the Loring Hall Theatre. The evening begins with an open microphone.

Admission is $10 at the door. A variety of coffees, teas and desserts are available for 50 cents. Net proceeds benefit the Unitarian-Universalist Service Committee. Volunteers are welcome.

For further information, call Jim Watson at 781-749-1767.

How to Find Real Estate in the Boston Area for 30% to 50% Below Market Value

DISCOVER A HUGE SOURCE OF PROFITS IN YOUR VERY OWN AREA

"I can show you from firsthand experience, it can take just a couple hours of your time to position yourself to make tens of thousands of dollars in real estate." J.G. Banks, legendary probate investor

You can buy choice real estate — oftentimes the best this area has to offer, for 30 percent to 50 percent of its market value, sell it quickly for its full price, and make tens of thousands of dollars on just about every investment.

You can do this with single-family houses. Duplexes. Condominiums. Apartment buildings. Strip malls. Office buildings. Ranchland. Farms. All types of real estate.

The reason these bargain properties exist is that they are part of an estate that's in probate. Don't let the word "probate" scare you. There is no legal mumbo jumbo involved. When you acquire real estate that's part of someone's estate, you're simply helping beneficiaries settle the estate by purchasing its assets.

In just a few hours each week — less time than most folks spend watching TV during a single evening — you can learn to cash in with estates by following my easy-to-follow "estate mining system."

A single mom with three teenagers used my system to purchase the home she never thought she could afford. But when you get the property for half price, that's what can make the difference.

In every neighborhood, it's possible that one or two properties, and maybe more, are in probate. You can find profit-making opportunities close to home. Even areas of town you only dreamed of moving to can suddenly become affordable when the price of real estate drops in half.

To Make Big Money: BUY LOW and SELL HIGH

Rest assured, I'm not talking about rundown foreclosures, bankruptcies, or condemned properties like the slew of so-called "real estate gurus." Properties in probate can be beautiful homes with no mortgage or debt attached, making them some of the cleanest and easiest of all real estate to buy low and sell high quickly.

There is no "For Sale" sign out front, and few people know where to find these properties. But for those who do, it can be a land of riches and the fastest route I know to making big money in real estate.

Why Such Incredible Bargains Everywhere?

Not every beneficiary wants to keep the property they inherited. Perhaps the estate involves people who live out of state and they don't want to change their lives. If a house is willed to more than one person, it's likely the property must be sold to ensure everybody gets their share.

Plus, most beneficiaries want their money quickly. Fifty dollars today is a lot better than the promise of $100 sometime off in the future. Especially when attorney fees are eating away at that $100 value. So you have highly motivated sellers who appreciate you're helping them get on with their lives.

Believe It or Not, a 300% Gain Can Be "All in a Day's Work"

The potential to make significant money is huge. For example, if you purchased just one property at a 30 percent discount, and then resold the property for 100 percent of its market value, you'd make about $45,000 on a property worth $150,000. And with my system, it may not even take a full week's effort to do this.

But here's how you leverage your money to make gigantic profits... assuming you put down 10 or 15 percent to purchase the property, when you quickly sell for full market value, the gain on your initial down payment could easily be more than 300 percent.

Real estate has long been a proven path to making millions of dollars. Almost anyone can walk along this path, and I believe that no route has more moneymaking potential than the one you'll discover in my FREE workshop.

How to Get the Cash to Buy Properties

In addition to learning why it's possible to regularly purchase real estate for as little as 50 cents on the dollar, you'll also discover it's possible to get the cash to fund your offers to buy properties. That means, you do not have to have money in the bank.

My system is so comprehensive that the State of California accredited it. But like just about everything in life, it works best if you work at it.

A gentleman from Dallas purchased 18 probate properties his first year.

Another student bought a v acant lot for $40,000 less than comparable lots on the s ame street.

You won't find a book on "How to Make Money in Estates" at bookstores. My FREE workshop is the only way to start learning the secrets of "estate investing."

More than three trillion dollars worth of assets are in probate. It's a buyer's paradise. Yet there are very few real estate investors who know about it.

I guarantee that if you attend my FREE workshop and put yourself "in the know," you'll be positioned to be "in the money" as never before.

TOP FIVE REASONS TO ACQUIRE PROBATE PROPERTIES

1. BARGAIN BASEMENT PRICES: The probate market is full of fabulous properties you can snap up for 30% to 50% below market value. Get the home of your dreams for your family, or resell quickly and be positioned to capture a lifetime of gains within days. It's the ultimate "Buy Low/Sell High" scenario.
2. HUGE INVENTORY: There are almost six million estates in probate, with assets worth trillions of dollars. Every type of real estate — from houses to beachside motels — are in probate. According to the Los Angeles Times, there are nearly 44 times more probate properties than properties in foreclosure.
3. BUYER'S MARKET: Purchasing property out of an estate assures you of a highly motivated seller. Most beneficiaries are anxious to sell the house (and other unwanted assets) so that they can pay off debts attached to the estate that must all be settled before the estate can be distributed.
4. ALL KINDS OF TREASURES: Historic architecture, classic cars, fine jewelry, antiques, art, toys, collectibles, and much more enter into probate every day. Millions of items. And they can sit there for years unless you rescue them.
5. IT'S A SECRET: Few people know how to find and purchase property from an estate. Even the beneficiaries don't know how to sell. That means, as a "first in" estate investor, you have little or no competition from other buyers — plus you're helping anxious sellers.

How to Buy Almost Anything for 30% to 50% Off

BUSINESSES. CLASSIC CARS. ANTIQUES. ART. COLLECTIBLES. TREASURES OF ALL KINDS.

There's a whole world of assets beyond houses. To start, there can be commercial real estate including industrial parks and offices. Plus all kinds of personal property — even businesses.

An enterprising young man turned his love for cars, and the knowledge he gained from the J.G. Banks workshop, into a career. The man purchased an auto shop that the beneficiaries had no interest in. He and his brother own and run the business, creating for themselves a potential lifetime of profits from one estate purchase. The flow of wealth didn't stop there. Our student also netted over $22,000 in profit on four cars. All four vehicles were acquired using the J.G. Banks system.

An estate can be your quickest way to acquire a prime business for pennies on the dollar. You can run it, or sell it quickly for market value and position yourself for substantial gains.

Estate hunting is also a great way to start an e-business, auction off your findings, and cash in on the new, thriving e-based economy.

One of our students made profits of 1,000 percent to 3,000 percent on the possessions he found in estates and then quickly sold. There is a potential windfall in every estate you search.

You can use probate to build a tidy business around just about any item or collectible that interests you. Millions of items, and real estate, end up as "buried treasure" hidden in probate.

OBITUARIES

Sherry Proctor

Architect; World War II navy veteran

Sherry Proctor of Manchester-by-the-Sea, died Aug. 11, 2005, at home, of cancer.

Born in Lockport, N.Y., he spent his early years on the Erie Canal and Lake Ontario, confirmation of his love for being on the water. After establishing himself professionally in Cambridge, he and his wife, Esther, decided Manchester was the ideal place for raising their growing family.

Mr. Proctor was an innovator from the beginning – building his own diving helmet before age 12. He commandeered his young sister Veneta to man the air pump on the shore, while he retrieved lost engines and such things, for very relieved boatmen.

Educated in aeronautical engineering at Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., and in architecture at the Institute of Design in Chicago, Ill. and at MIT in Cambridge, Mr. Proctor served three years during World War II in the U.S. Navy on four aircraft carriers, including the USS Midway.

Throughout his architectural career his nationwide projects were community and cultural institutions, hospitals, museums, aquariums, and schools. He listened to the needs of those who would be occupying the space he was creating and designed accordingly, from cancer patients at Maine Medical in Portland, visitors to the Museum of Fine Art in Boston, and the Birmingham Civil Rights Institute in Alabama, to Seiji Ozawa at Symphony Hall.

He was a member of the Cambridge Boat Club for over 35 years, and race course designer of the Head of the Charles Regatta for over 25 years. He was a founder and trustee of Community Rowing Inc., on the Charles River.

Mr. Proctor's contributions in Manchester-by-the-Sea were no different. As a very active and dedicated volunteer for Manchester organizations, he had a keen sense of community and found his own way to contribute with 'behind-the-scenes' enthusiasm, energy, innovation and fine craftsmanship. Always the problem-solver and trouble-shooter, he consistently appeared with a perfect solution. His desire to support the town carried into numerous volunteer consulting roles, notably the restoration of Seaside 1 fire station; modification of the Manchester fire station; redesign of the Manchester Library front walk, an elegant solution for disabled access; and design and construction of numerous 4th of July floats for Junior Sailing, Boy Scouts, and the Bicycle Pedestrian Committee. He was a founder of the Junior Sailing Program, member of the Historic District Commission, the Planning Board, the Bicycle Pedestrian Committee and Crossing Guard Program, and most recently, the Clara B. Winthrop Committee.

Mr. Proctor delighted in riding his high wheeler in the 4th of July parades and other events throughout New England, and truly enjoyed giving time and skills to the Essex Shipbuilding Museum in Essex. Humbled by the knowledge and skills around him, he appreciated "being allowed" to join in; especially with the building of the Lewis H. Story vessel, which he captained on many occasions. He was also a technical consultant on boat design for the Ipswich-based U.S. Team-American Star in the Trans-Atlantic Rowing Challenge of 2001.

His robust participation in life swept up his children in many ways, and he lovingly participated in their lives. Above all, he was full of inspiration, innovation and enthusiasm for unique ideas and sound solutions; and encouraged the same in others.

He leaves his wife of 54 years, Esther M. (Slim) Proctor; six children, Hannah Proctor of Francestown, N.H., Gaylen Proctor of Haverhill, Lauren McAloon and her husband Brendan, of Key West, Fla., Nathan Proctor of Manchester, Seth Proctor of Waltham, and Eliza Proctor of Brooklyn, N.Y.; a sister, Veneta Roebuck, and her husband Arthur of Cohasset; and many nieces and nephews.

A gathering was held in his honor on Sunday, Aug. 21 at Seaside 1, the original fire station in Manchester.

Contributions in his memory may be made to the Essex Ship Building Museum, P.O. Box 277, Essex, MA 01929; or to Community Rowing Inc., 600 Pleasant St., Watertown, MA 02472; or a community charity of choice.

Richard P. Smith

Cohasset public school teacher

Richard Peter Smith, 55, of Braintree, formerly of Quincy, died Aug. 19, 2005, at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston.

Born, raised, and educated in Quincy, he was a teacher in the Cohasset public schools for the past four years. Prior to teaching in Cohasset, Mr. Smith had been a teacher in the Sharon public schools for eight years. He was a member of the Massachusetts Teachers Association.

Wild and watery adventures abound in Mexican state of Tabasco

By MELANIE YOUNG
SPECIAL TO THE HERALD

ACOTALPA, Tabasco, Mexico -- As toucans twittered and two howler monkeys peered down from treetops a few yards above my head, I wondered what the heck I was doing on a small wooden platform 130 heart-stopping feet above the jungle floor.

Planting my feet on the top rung of the thin metal railing encircling a tree-canopy aerie, I held my breath and my harness for dear life as my guide gave me a shove into the leafy green abyss. My spontaneous scream quickly became laughter as I whizzed across the 150-foot-long steel cable attached to the next platform in a towering tree. Now pumped with exhilaration and cheered on by my fellow adventurers (most in their 20s and 30s) as I made a less-than-graceful landing, I couldn't wait to zoom across the next 10 zip lines feeling like Jane in an old Tarzan movie.

Launched in Costa Rica, canopy tours -- tirolesa in Spanish -- are the latest adrenaline-charged addition to the fledgling eco-tourism and adventure attractions of this southern Mexico state where the weather can be as hot as the local peppers that gave their name to the area's famous hot sauce. Tabasco is not for wimps.

My initiation into this state's natural wonders began about 60 miles south of its capital, Villahermosa, with a ride across the jade-green Tacotalpa River in a small motorboat, followed by a hike up to Kolem jaa, an ecological center and lodge that opened in 2003 after replanting many acres of forest that had fallen to slash-and-burn agriculture. Expecting Spartan accommodations like summer camp, my comrades-in-daring and I were pleasantly surprised by our thatch-roofed, stucco bungalows with air conditioning and hot showers -- essential in steamy Tabasco.

After dinner under a big thatched-roof pavilion in the jungle, we chilled out in natural pools formed by several tiers of falls on a stream winding through the eco-center's 68 acres.

Gearing up for the canopy tour the next morning took more than an hour, but considering that our lives depended on the harnesses that would allow us to swing and dangle like monkeys from cables linking 11 platforms through the high jungle canopy, no one complained as our guides carefully adjusted each person's equipment. This included thick leather gloves for grasping the cable to control your speed. But by the time we reached the last zip line -- nearly 500 feet long -- we were flying like Spider-Man and yodeling like Tarzan. And we could brag that we had completed the longest canopy-tour circuit in Latin America.

Torch ginger along a hiking trail at Kolem jaa resort in Tabasco region in Mexico

Getting ready for the zip line in Mexico's Tabasco region

The sun was high and hot as we clambered down the last tree-platform rope ladder, so the idea of next rappelling down a cool waterfall sounded wonderful, like an adventure from "Romancing the Stone" (which was filmed in Mexico). But when I peered over the edge of the thundering, mist-flinging, 60-foot waterfall that we would rappel down, like Falstaff I decided discretion was the better part of valor.

For those brave enough to jump off backward from a standing position in the churning water at the top of the falls, then rappel down a line in the crashing torrent, it was, my companions said, a thrilling and exhilarating experience that no doubt would impress the folks back home -- and perhaps grow ever more dangerous with each retelling.

Daredevils at Kolem jaa also can relish the "Commando Trail," a hike that combines waterfall rappelling with zinging along zip lines, walking across wiggly rope bridges and other cool challenges designed to put your adrenaline into overdrive.

The eco-center's name, Kolem jaa, is Mayan for "big water," fitting for a place crisscrossed by waterfalls, rivers and streams. Although Tabasco encompasses less than 1 percent of Mexico's land, it has a third of the country's water.

Nowhere is Tabasco's freshwater wealth more apparent than at Punta Manglar, an eco-tourist reserve located near the Gulf of Mexico coast and within the larger Centla Wetlands Biosphere Reserve of more than 740,000 acres -- much of it rivers, estuaries, swamps, marshes and tidewater forests. This watery world, about 65 miles northeast of Villahermosa (or 130 miles from Kolem jaa) is a haven for birds and bird-watchers. On a morning boat tour (about $30 per person with lunch; for reservations e-mail pantanos@intrasur.net.mx), our English-speaking naturalist guide, Maribel Rosales, pointed out some of the feathered species here, including kingfishers, cormorants, whistling ducks, herons and rare jabiru storks.

She also explained how the dense mangroves and other plants at water's edge serve as filters, cleaning and oxygenating the water. Turtles, crocodiles and more than 500 species of flowers also thrive in this rich aquatic domain.

From our boat we watched fishermen poling their dugouts along as they checked their nets and traps for crabs and shrimp. At a fishing camp on the edge of the dense mangroves, local fishermen hung their nets and cleaned their catch as they taught us the names of the fish: robalo (also called sea trout and often on Tabasco menus), cintilla (a silver ribbonfish used in ceviche), and pejelagarto (an alligator-snouted fish mostly smoked and used in many tasty local dishes). Because the reserve encompasses estuaries where freshwater rivers and Gulf saltwater meet, visitors also may spot manatees and sharks on their voyage.

At the end of the tour we climbed from our motorboat into small canoes and paddled through channels in the tidewater forest while noting giant carnivorous bromeliads in the trees and small scarlet crabs on fallen logs. We finished with a hike on a raised walkway through the forest as our guide pointed out the otherworldly, iridescent blue morpho butterflies and other wildlife and plants.

At our lunch banquet afterward, we had a chance to sample smoked pejelagarto and other local dishes.

Like the zesty hot sauce, Tabasco is not for everyone. But for nature lovers with a taste for adrenaline and adventure, there is much to offer.

Beach Boys shine in the summertime

Music Circus show set for Aug. 26

Mike Love hasn't had a summer vacation in over 40 years. As lead singer and a founding member of The Beach Boys, who play the South Shore Music Circus on Friday, the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame member wouldn't have it any other way.

"Live concerts and personal appearances are my favorite things to do," the singer-songwriter explained by telephone recently from Japan.

For Love, who in the 1960s co-wrote eleven Top 10 singles in five years with cousin Brian Wilson, including "Fun, Fun, Fun," "I Get Around," "Help Me Rhonda," "California Girls" and "Good Vibrations," the group's continued popularity as a live act means some 200 concerts worldwide each year. And little time for Love's other projects like his soon-to-be-released new album, "Mike Love Not War."

"It's been about 25 years since I did a solo project. I've been working on the new album for the past two or three years. I've recorded 17 songs, probably 12 of which will make it onto the CD."

The CD's title is a play on the song that will be the album's first single, "Make Love Not War," which the 64-year-old performer says reflects feelings he first had during the Vietnam War and has been experiencing again since the Iraq conflict began.

"The single is a philosophical piece that suggests human beings find ways to resolve conflict short of war. The title hearkens back to Vietnam and more recently the anti-war protests involving Iraq. It alludes to Marvin Gaye's 1971 song "What's Going On?" which really captured the mood of society at that time."

The 64-year-old is quick to point out that the solo effort reflects his personal more than political views. "We performed at both Reagan inaugurals, and we've played for both the elder Bush and the current President Bush. We've also been pleased with these opportunities and with our association with Republican administrations. We are, however, against the idea of war. War and what goes on to fuel it is insane."

The longtime supporter of environmental causes knows the new music may not have the almost universal appeal of his Beach Boys classics. "This is the first time I've ventured out on a limb and then sawed it off. Someone has to say it like it is and I guess its my turn. When it comes to war, my attitude is simply, There has to be a better way, fellas."

With the passing of brothers Carl and Dennis Wilson and the departure of both Al Jardine and Brian Wilson from The Beach Boys, Love stands as the group's only current original member. Even with his new album, Love has no plans to leave the group he helped make legendary. "I can support this album in the context of a Beach Boys concert. Indeed, one of the songs, 'Cool Head, Warm Heart,' starts a cappella and really sounds like it came off a Beach Boys album. I have no plans to go solo."

Love also has no designs on re-teaming with the long-troubled Brian Wilson who is on his own tour this summer in support of his album "Smile" which, although just released last year, began as a Beach Boys project in 1967.

"If Brian Wilson wanted to write with me and record with us again then I would be happy to work with him, but that probably won't be happening too soon. I haven't heard 'Smile,' but I have heard Brian say that his current group is superior to The Beach Boys. I find those kinds of comments offensive. I'm also pretty ticked off that he rerecorded 'Good Vibrations' with new lyrics replacing mine which were Grammy nominated. I don't particularly want to hear new lyrics to those songs. That's one of the reasons we do the songs the way they were recorded 40 years ago, using the same arrangements. It's kind of discouraging that Brian still makes disparaging remarks about us, especially his brothers who are no longer here. Brian at his height, plus Carl, Al and Dennis, were better than any group Brian could assemble today."

The Beach Boys will be at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier Street, Cohasset, Friday, Aug. 26. For tickets and information call 617-931-2787 or visit www.themusiccircus.org.

Gamble on Betts for a great perfomance

Legendary Allman Brother guitarist plays Plymouth Saturday

Maybe, as his song "Ramblin' Man" points out, Dickey Betts was "born in the backseat of a Greyhound bus, rollin' down Highway 41." But even if he was born at South Shore Hospital on Route 18, as a member of the Allman Brothers Band, Dickey Betts managed to come up with some of the most sensational guitar instrumentals of all time. The ABB's remake of Betts' rollicking "Jessica" won a Grammy for Best Rock Instrumental in 1995, the same year the band was ushered into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

Memorable blues-rock is what Dickey Betts is known for, carving out his place in musical history as a co-founder of The Allman Brothers Band while plowing the road to rock and roll immortality with such great songs as "Ramblin' man," "Jessica," "Blue Sky," "Crazy Love," "In Memory of Elizabeth Reed," and many more.

On Saturday night, Aug. 26, Plymouth Memorial Hall will rock out with these great songs, as well as newer material and some great Betts solo numbers "I try to keep new material in there to make sure we don't turn into a nostalgia act," he explained. "I'm doing three or four of them in the show. After you play them for a little bit, the crowd forgets that they're new. We've been playing the new ones all year. People look forward to hearing them now."

His signature sound and sometimes eclectic personality fueled a decades-long career with the Allman Brothers Band that survived the death of two members and several breakups and reunions. Betts and the Allmans played their last concert together in 2001, but his trademark sound has survived it all, maintaining a legacy that more than 30 years later continues to thrive on radio and sell out concert halls. But he still remembers back in the day. "A legend was killed over 30 years ago," he says, remembering back to the tragic death of Duane Allman. "And that was the end of that. Nobody's gonna replace Duane. We're just going on to the next day," Betts said. "After Duane died I just had to start playing slide, which I'd always played, even in Second Coming. It was just different after Duane died."

Betts also talks about some of his most famous songs. "Jessica is my daughter," Betts said. "I wrote that when she was about two years old, watching her crawl around the room. I was playing that little melody." "Blue Sky," he adds, "was the English translation of the Chippewa name of an American Indian woman I once knew. That was a song I wrote for her," he said.

These songs and the guitar playing that guides them testify to what Betts brought to the Allmans and how he is a music machine unto himself, an entity who helped spawn the jam-band genre that today is prompting millions of 20-, 30-, 40- and 50-year-olds to buy millions of concert tickets each year. A generation after Betts and the Allmans carved their place in the history of recorded music with "Live at Fillmore East," Betts has written songs that celebrate, commiserate, get down and cheer up. "Let's All Get Together" conjures up gospel in the spirit of "Revival," which Betts wrote for the Allmans.

"I just love playing in front of people," said the Florida native and son of a housewife and carpenter who also played the fiddle. "I just love getting out and seeing people. It's kind of what I've been doing all my life."

In what promises to be a memorable show at Plymouth Memorial Hall, Betts will also be doing his part to raise money for the Muscular Dystrophy Association as he will be autographing an electric guitar that will be raffled off the night of the concert. And opening for Dickey Betts & Great Southern will be Todd Wolfe, former lead guitarist for Sheryl Crow.

Tickets for Dickey Betts & Great Southern are priced at $27 & $32 and are on sale at the Plymouth Memorial Hall box-office, located at 50 Court Street in Plymouth (508-747-1340), online at www.plymouthhall.com, by phone at 866-468-7619, and at all Strawberries. The show is produced by Loretta LaRoche Productions.

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127
A CHANGE IN THE PROGRAM
As its name implies, a digitally programmable hearing instrument is programmed by the hearing instrument specialist with the use of an external computer. This has the advantage of allowing the hearing specialist the flexibility of changing the programs in the instrument in accordance with the wearer's needs. For instance, the wearer's preference for sound amplification may change after he or she becomes more accustomed to its use. At first, a user may not want high pitches to be overly amplified because they sound too sharp. After a while, though, the user may want to hear more of these high-pitched sounds. In a programmable hearing instrument, the hearing specialist can boost the higher pitches to meet the user's changing needs.
Good hearing is not something to be taken for granted. Millions suffer from hearing loss, including an estimated 1 out of every 4 senior citizens. If you suspect a hearing problem for yourself or a family member, give us a call at the FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 781-337-1144. We'll arrange a convenient, free, painless hearing test at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Building in Weymouth, to determine the best way to proceed. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits and Mass Health.
P.S. A digitally programmable hearing instrument is not truly digital because it does not contain a computer chip, as does a digital hearing instrument.

Former Cohasset handyman faces charge

Lawyer says key witness in jail is not credible

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Former local handyman Danny Adams, now an amusement ride operator, took center stage last Friday when he was arraigned on a charge relating to a high-profile criminal case in Cohasset involving the theft of upwards of $500,000 in jewelry stolen from Polly Logan of Nichols Road.

A bevy of reporters from newspapers and television stations, along with photographers and cameramen, waited outside Quincy District Court for Adams, who was delivered to the courthouse by two Cohasset police detectives shortly after 9 a.m.

Adams, wearing a maroon golf shirt and Bermuda shorts and with his hands cuffed behind his back, still managed to reach his arms around to the front and wave with one hand to the news media. Animated by all the attention, he said mockingly to members of the media, "This is it!"

Cook bidder to sue

Says state law broken

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

If the board of selectmen doesn't rescind its vote awarding Deer Hill Partners, LLC the bid to build on the Cook Estate, runner-up Cohasset Associates, Inc. has threatened to sue for more than $3 million.

Attorney Charles Humphreys, who represents Cohasset Associates, headed up by Cohasset resident Donald Staszko, sent a letter to the board of selectmen dated Aug. 29, stating the company's formal Notice of Protest to the award of the bid. The town would not make the letter available to the public, but the Mariner was able to obtain a copy.

Humphreys could not be reached for comment, but the letter he sent on behalf of his client outlines their position.

Water sale is in the pipeline

3A work to be finished soon

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

In about a month, Cohasset will have the infrastructure in place to start selling water to Aquarion Water Company in Hingham.

The construction that is taking place along Rte. 3A involves installing about a mile of pipeline along the east side of the highway from roughly across from Hingham Lumber to the Cohasset-Hingham line where it crosses the street to meet the Aquarion pipe on the opposite side of the road.

The pumphouse, a brick structure that is being built on the west side of the road, will pump Cohasset water to Hingham to meet that town's higher water pressure and will also continuously monitor the water quality and report that to the Cohasset Water Department and Aquarion.

Erickson Retirement Communities, which is purchasing water to supply Linden Ponds off Whiting Street in south Hingham, is paying for the pipeline and pumphouse.

The sale is the result of a 20-year agreement between the Cohasset Water Department and Erickson. Under the agreement, Erickson can purchase up to 300,000 gallons of per day from Cohasset for Linden

It's back to the books on Tuesday

Schools open doors Sept. 6

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

It's that time of year again. Yellow buses are gearing up for their first-day pickups, children will begin filling their backpacks with pens and notebooks, and parents will get their cameras ready for the first day of school.

For students in grades one through 12, the first day of school will be Tuesday, Sept. 6. Although the 2005 PSO calendar shows a different start date, the decision to make the change to Sept. 6 was voted on by the school committee in March.

There are many new and exciting initiatives happening at each of the Cohasset public schools, and Superintendent Denise Walsh said she is really looking forward to opening day.

"Even after 30 years in the business, every year you still get the knot in your stomach and think, 'Are we ready?' You become anxious, just like the students," Walsh said.

Walsh said there will be some changes at the various schools this year, and she is especially excited about two new programs beginning at the Osgood School. Parents will now have the option to enroll their children in an integrated preschool program run by the school, or full-day kindergarten.

"This is exactly what the parents had requested and we're very pleased we've been able to accomplish what the community asked for," she said.

Osgood principal Janet Sheehan said she can't wait for the start of school either, as she too is looking forward to watching the programs take shape.

Formerly, the school had housed a preschool but it was a separate program run by the South Shore Collaborative. However, this year the program will be run entirely by Osgood School staff that will be teaching using the same curriculum guidelines already in place for the older students in the building.

Why is a Career in CART and Captioning the Future?

- Ability to start on the ground floor in a new industry.
- Potential to earn $35 to$100/ hour.
- Work at home (95% do) and set your own hours.
- It is the law!
- American Disabilities Act mandates equal access but large percentage of requests go unfilled.
- FCC mandates by 2006 all TV programming must be captioned, but not enough realtime captioners.
- Federal law requires agencies, schools and institutions provide hearing impaired services, but few CART providers to meet the need.
- Demand will continue to increase with aging of baby boomers.

What are CART and Captioning?

- CART/Captioning provide communication access for the hearing impaired.
- Captioning provides text for TV programs, video conferences, multimedia, video games, etc.
- CART provides visual communication in educational settings, conventions, town meetings, etc.

Program uses latest realtime voice recognition technology (minimal typing skills)

How does Cohasset measure up?

$7.5K study should pay off

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"They did an analysis and gave us 20 communities like us."
— Town Manager Bill Griffin

There could be areas for which Cohasset could take a budgetary cue from peer communities. That's what officials hope to find out, when they receive a "benchmarking" report compiled to help the town see how it measures up.

By "benchmarking" or comparing the town of Cohasset against municipalities with comparable attributes, Municipal Benchmarking LLC — a Waltham company that analyzes town spending and prepares reports to aid in the budgeting process — can find ways for a town to run more efficiently.

Municipal Benchmarking is in the process of compiling a 150-page report called "The Municipal Yardstick," which will compare Cohasset with 20 other municipalities specifically chosen for their demographic similarity. Cohasset will be measured on many criteria including various general government, educational, and public safety expenditures and land assessments.

Currently, Town Manager Bill Griffin is gathering additional information from various town department budgets to give to Municipal Benchmarking for its report. After seeing a sample report, which gave an outline of how Cohasset measures up in certain areas against 20 similar towns, the town agreed to purchase the entire report for $7,500.

"They did an analysis and gave us 20 communities like us," Griffin said of the sample report, adding when the town receives the final report, it will be allowed to choose three other communities not included in the 20 for further data comparison.

Griffin said he has already been using the information compiled in the sample report, but the benchmarking study will be on-going. Beginning with the fire department, he has contacted the chiefs in 19 of the communities outlined in the sample report and asked them to complete a survey on the various services their departments provide, and as of Monday, 14 had responded. Griffin did not include the town of Winchester in his data collection, as he feels with a population of roughly 24,000 or four times the size of Cohasset, it is less comparable.

Taking a very preliminary look at how Cohasset's fire department measures up, he said he has found there are a number of towns with smaller populations that have mostly volunteer call fire departments which do not offer Advanced Life Support ambulance service.

"Cohasset has primarily a paid, professional firefighter staff and provides ALS level ambulance service," he said, which makes a huge difference when comparing Cohasset against other towns.

Griffin said in his research, he also found the town of Wenham has only half a chief position, and everyone else is a call firefighter, which significantly reduces costs to that town.

Griffin said his research will be on-going and will expand when the final report arrives. For now, his next plan of attack is to look into the town's Department of Public Works and compare using the preliminary report.

The advisory committee recommended the study because overrides have become an almost yearly occurrence. By comparing Cohasset against similar towns, it is hoped ways to better spend the town's money can be found.

Advisory committee member Tucker Glavin said he was very happy to see Griffin approaching the budget by comparing each department level against similar departments in other towns, rather than comparing all of Cohasset against all of another town.

"If nine out of 20 communities virtually have a call force, our numbers are going to be different," and Glavin.

In the past, some benchmarking discussions have focused around Cohasset's spending "per capita" and Griffin said that is something he would like to stay away from. He used himself to point out per capita costs don't always measure up.

He noted that he, as the town manager, costs the town a certain amount of money. He oversees a town with roughly 7,500 residents. The town of Duxbury has roughly 12,000, but he and the Duxbury town manager have similar salaries. "I cost this town a certain amount, but I'm twice as expensive per capita than he is," Griffin said, which isn't the best means of comparison.

Griffin said he is going to use the information from the report to see whether Cohasset is "way off" in its budget.

"We're going to try to make it a useful document, and make it part of the budget message," he said.

Advisory committee member Roger Hill asked whether Griffin thought the $7,500 price tag was worth the cost.

"Absolutely," said Griffin.

Benchmarking is a long-term goal of the town and Griffin said he hopes the final report will be in by mid-September at the latest. Once it is received, it will be discussed in-depth and used in future budget sessions.

Mailbox marauders hit King and Forest streets

"They might think of it as fun, but it's a serious thing to destroy someone's property."
— Police Chief James Hussey

Police are investigating upwards of 15 incidents of destruction in the early hours of Sunday morning when vandals traveled along King and Forest streets damaging and knocking over mailboxes.

Cohasset Police Chief James Hussey said in at least one case the vandals would have had to leave their car to reach the mailbox which is set back from the street.

"We have no vehicle identification, no plates, and no physical evidence collected at the scene that can help us yet," Hussey said.

He is appealing to residents who may have seen or heard something to call the police at 781-383-1055.

Hussey said the vandals apparently used "some kind of instrument" out the window of the vehicle to hit the mailboxes, many of which were knocked over and destroyed.

Reports about the damage pepper the police log starting at 2:30 a.m. Sunday and continuing until almost 6 a.m.

Hussey said the damage in some cases is over $250 — making what those involved might think of as a prank — a serious crime.

"This type of behavior is something typically youth might be involved in," Hussey said. "They might think of it as fun, but it's a serious thing to destroy someone's property.

"We're looking for clues and asking for the public's help,"

Cohasset water sale to Hingham in the pipeline

Ponds that when fully built will be a 2,000-unit retirement community.

Initially Erickson will purchase 15,000 gallons per day reaching the 300,000 in 2013 when Linden Ponds is expected to completed.

To get water to Linden Ponds, Cohasset water will enter the northern part of the Hingham System off Rte. 3A; Aquarion then provides a like amount of water to Linden Ponds at the southern end of the system.

In other words Aquarion, which gets a "wheeling" fee, acts as the transportation system for the water being purchased by Erickson and will not get more water than what is used by Linden Ponds, the Cohasset Water Commission says.

Aquarion is authorized by the state to supply 3.5 million gallons of water a day to its customers, an amount that would be exceeded if the company were to supply water to Linden Ponds, hence the interconnection agreement.

The 15,000 gallons equates to less than one percent of the average daily demand in the Aquarion system, which serves Hingham, Hull, and North Cohasset. That figure would jump to 8.5 percent when the development is fully built.

Cohasset, whose water supply comes from Lily Pond and the Aaron River Reservoir, has a safe yield of 3-1/2 million gallons per day without hurting the resource and is only using about 710,000 gallons per day on average.

Initially Erickson will purchase 15,000 gallons per day reaching the 300,000 in 2013 when Linden Ponds is expected to completed.

Water commissioner John McNabb said the Cohasset Water Department is in compliance with the TTHM regulation and expects to be in compliance going forward. In late 2004 tests revealed Cohasset water exceeded the maximum contaminant level for drinking water for Total Trihalomethanes or TTHM.

Although the the Cohasset Water Department and Aquarion say no immediate risk is posed from drinking water with elevated levels of TTHM, it is a known carcinogen. TTHM is a byproduct of water chlorination where chlorine mixes with organic matter, in this case attributable to the high level of organic growth in the water source, Cohasset's Lily Pond.

Aquarion had said if the water quality issue was not corrected by this fall the interconnection plan would be delayed.

The amount of money Cohasset will receive from Erickson increases from about $28,000 in fiscal 2005 to $600,000 in fiscal 2015 and will help keep Cohasset water rates down. The water department revenue stream is about $1.7 million per year, so the Erickson sale will increase that by one-third.

The Cohasset Water Department will own the new water main which will allow it to provide better water service and fire protection along that stretch of Rte. 3A.

In 1998, Town Meeting adopted an article that gave the Water Commission the ability to sell water out of town.

Danny Adams' attorney, J. Lawrence Kelly of Quincy, tells the judge why Adams' bail should be set at an amount that "he has a shot at making" during last Friday's arraignment.

Former Cohasset handyman faces charge in district court in a cell at the Cohasset Police Headquarters on Elm Street after he had been extradited from Ohio where he was working with a carnival at the Ohio State Fair.

Three years ago Logan, then 77, – who stands at roughly five feet tall and weighs less than 100 pounds — was the victim of a home invasion and robbery. The perpetrators allegedly took the rings off her fingers and pendant off her neck before binding her with duct tape and leaving her in a sweltering upstairs bedroom where attic-like temperatures were in excess of 100 degrees.

They also stole family heirloom silver and drove off in Logan's Ford Escort wagon.

At the time of the robbery in July 2002, Adams was staying in Logan's home in the loggia off the living room. He found the severely dehydrated Logan, some 36 hours after the robbery, and called 9-1-1. He told police he had been away on a camping trip.

Cohasset police have not said whether Adams is a suspect in the home invasion and robbery.

Logan's two children, Martha and Malcolm, took out a temporary restraining order against Adams while their mother was still in the hospital. That order has since expired.

Logan, a native of Iowa, who hasn't lost her Midwestern openness, said she first met Adams, who is from Missouri, when he was working at a local florist and he helped put some flowers in the trunk of her car. She hired him to do odd jobs around her home and eventually he had his own handyman business in town. She also helped him get involved in local politics. She nominated him to serve on the Republican Town Committee and he worked at the polls.

Assistant District Attorney David Levy told Judge Paul V. Buckley during the arraignment Logan "almost died" after the robbery. Saying Adams was a flight risk, Levy asked the judge for $500,000 surety and $50,000 cash bail.

But Adams' court-appointed attorney, J. Lawrence Kelly of Quincy, asked the judge to release Adams — who is charged with receiving stolen property valued at more than

"Although there was a serious home invasion with an elderly woman who is a well-known person. That is not what this case is about."

— J. Lawrence Kelly, Adams' attorney

$250 — on personal recognizance or to set bail not to exceed $500 "or a reasonable amount he has a shot at making." Adams plead not guilty to the charge.

Kelly said Adams did not resist arrest or extradition in Ohio where he was working with a traveling carnival.

"This is a case of receiving stolen property which is a maximum of a five-year felony were it to go to Superior Court," said Kelly, adding that Adams had appeared "every time he was asked to come to" Quincy Court on two prior matters: one that was continued without a finding and another that resulted in a dismissal.

Kelly also said investigators have based their case on information from an individual "who is a resident of the Suffolk County House of Correction."

The charge against Adams followed on the heels of the indictment of Kevin Gunter, 22, of Roxbury, last month on a similar charge. When indicted, Gunter was serving time at the Massachusetts Correctional Institution in Shirley on a firearms violations.

According to the District Attorney's Office, Gunter allegedly received multiple expensive rings taken from Polly Logan, in exchange for a small amount of crack cocaine. He subsequently fenced the rings to a crack dealer for $700.

Cohasset police said Adams sold a portion of Logan's jewelry to Gunter, who gave crack cocaine to Adams in exchange for the rings.

The judge, who ordered Adams to stay away from Logan and her Nichols Road home, set bail at $5,000 cash or $50,000 surety. Adams is due back in court Sept. 21 for a pre-trial conference and probable cause hearing.

As the Mariner went to press yesterday, Adams was still being held in the Norfolk County House of Correction in Dedham and has not made bail.

Outside the courtroom following the arraignment, Levy declined comment referring all questions to the District Attorney's office.

But Kelly had a lot to say. He pointed out that Adams, who was gainfully employed, did not do anything to evade authorities in Ohio and agreed to face the charges here in Massachusetts. He questioned the credibility of Gunter, the key witness in the case.

"Although there was a serious home invasion with an elderly woman who is a well-known person," he said. "That is not what this case is about. This is about receiving stolen property – that is all he (Adams) is charged with. That is the choice of the government. He is not charged with stealing and not charged in the home invasion."

Police had kept track of Adams' whereabouts since the 2002 robbery.

Last month, Det. Sgt. Gregory Lennon traveled to Columbus, Ohio, along with Det. Garrett Hunt where they were able to locate and identify Adams at the Ohio State Fair. He was arrested and held at the Franklin County Jail in Columbus until he was extradited to Massachusetts. State Police attached to the district attorney's office brought Adams back from Ohio. He was booked in Cohasset and spent the night in the lockup at the station last Thursday (Aug. 25).

Last Friday, Lennon and Hunt brought Adams to court. Lennon said police have put a lot of time and effort into this case. "The investigation has been ongoing since the crime occurred and it is still ongoing," he said.

Police Chief James Hussey said Cohasset police continue to work with the district attorney's office in the investigation.

"We hope we will have further people charged in conjunction with the home invasion," he said.

POLICE BRIEFS

Car crossed the center line

Police say Mark St. John, 46, of Stockbridge Street, who remains hospitalized in fair condition at Massachusetts General Hospital following last week's accident on Rte. 3A, crossed the center line into the path of an oncoming vehicle causing a head-on crash.

The two occupants of the GMC Sierra pickup truck that St. John's 1987 Ford Ranger pickup collided with were also hospitalized for several days but have now been released, police said.

Police Chief James Hussey said nothing observed at the scene would indicate that drugs or alcohol were involved.

He said witnesses say St. John may have swerved to avoid hitting a vehicle that had stopped in front of him. "It appears at the speed he was traveling, he couldn't stop," Hussey said.

Police have not been able to talk to St. John.

According to the police log, St. John will be cited with negligent operation of a motor vehicle, marked lanes violation, driving an unregistered and an uninsured motor vehicle, and attaching plates.

Police detoured traffic from that stretch of 3A near Schofield Road for four hours following the accident that occurred shortly after 6 p.m., Tuesday (Aug. 23) to allow emergency personnel to help the victims and for police to reconstruct the accident.

Bridge jumping still a problem

The weekly police log continues to be full of reports of officers clearing youths from the Mill River or Cunningham bridges where usually on hot days the teens been jumping off into the waters below.

Police Chief James Hussey said his officers cannot condone the activity which is considered very dangerous.

"I'm putting together a package for the Town Manager to recommend non-criminal citations," Hussey said. That would mean police could levy fines for repeat offenders.

He said recently a youth brought a trampoline to the Mill River Bridge.

"The police officer had nice conversation with him about what could potentially happen," Hussey said.

There have been other instances when teens run across Mill River Bridge and put their hands on the railing and flip over into the water below.

Hussey said next year police will have a plan in place to discourage this activity and make everyone aware of the "ground rules."

"I realize jumping off the bridge may be a tradition," Hussey said. "But it's an accident waiting to happen."

The Mill River Bridge is on Border Street and Cunningham Bridge is on Atlantic Avenue.

Two bouncing baby girls to brag about

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

ENJOY THE WEEKEND

Hello, Cohasset. Well, school is right around the corner starting on Tuesday, Sept. 6 for Cohasset students, grades 1-12. Make sure to enjoy this beautiful Labor Day weekend with your families and friends, stay safe and help the kids transition back to school in a happy and relaxed manner. I want to send a personal note to my husband as we celebrate anniversary number 17 this weekend. Happy anniversary, Bob.

Thank heavens for little girls is definitely a phrase to remember in this week's column as we welcome not one, but two sweet babies.

GOODWIN GRANDDAUGHTER

Georgianna Rose Goodwin was born on Aug. 3, 2005 in Ithaca, N.Y. to parents Gabriel and Caitlin Goodwin. Georgianna is the granddaughter of Brad and Dee Goodwin of Cohasset and Peter and Paula Cowling Homer. She is also the great granddaughter of Ruth Goodwin of Cohasset, Seeley Clark Eddington of Maine, Joan Casey Cortland of N.Y. and Rose and Albert Cowling Maidstone of Kent, England. Everyone is so happy with this pretty little lady. Brad and Dee recently enjoyed a visit to both of their granddaughters at once. Congratulations everyone!

NUMBER FOUR

Amy and Lance Norris of Cohasset announce the arrival of a beautiful baby girl, Nicole Ashley, who arrived Aug. 31 at South Shore Hospital. Nicole was greeted at home by her big sister Savanna and her two brothers Ray and Dylan. What a wonderful family for you to join sweet Nicole. Enjoy her each and every day.

TOMATO CONTEST!

You Say Tom-AY-to, We Say Tom-AH-to! Calling all farmers to the 1st Annual Tomato Contest at the Cohasset Village Farmers' Market on Thursday, Sept. 15. Bring your homegrown beauties, or your best tomato recipe to the Market by 3:30 for tasting and judging. Good luck! Questions? Call 781-383-0170.

SWIM-DIVE TEAM BENEFIT

A lobster fest/clambake is being held at Cohasset Harbor Inn on Friday, Sept. 9 at 6:30 p.m. and catered by Atlantica to help benefit and fund the newly created Swim Dive team for Cohasset and Scituate. Items have also been donated which will be auctioned. Tickets ($30 each for lobster and $15 for barbecued chicken only) must be purchased by Labor Day and can be obtained from Mandy Mahoney 781-383-9812, Julia Drybanski 781-383-0986 or Helen Daley at 781-383-2978.

This is a wonderful way to end the summer and to support the high school swim team. Gather a group of friends and call and order tickets.

In addition, Elizabeth Kissick (EK Designs) is providing a bracelet with a beach sandal for anyone who sponsors her "Reach the Beach" Run by donating a minimum of $100 to the high school swim dive team. Checks should be made out to the Town of Cohasset/ High School Swim Team and sent to Helen Daley, 11 Ledgewood Farm Drive, Cohasset.

MARK YOUR CALENDAR!

The Gilligan's Island event at the Cohasset Sailing Club for senior citizens has been rescheduled to Sept. 10. Please call the Senior Center at 781-383-9112 for more information.

That is all this week. Please take the time to send a thought or prayer to the people who have been affected by Hurricane Katrina. We so many times take things so for granted and life changes in an instance.

Send all of your news and information to me no later than Tuesdays by noon.

NEWCOMERS CLUB

Local author - The Newcomers club is celebrating local author, Claire Cook, by reading her novel "Multiple Choice". Its story is an effervescent novel of family life that will strike a chord with women everywhere! Editor Jeanne Ray calls it, "A truly joyful read". The Chicago Tribune calls it "Pitch Perfect". Get your copy and start reading today! The first meeting to discuss Multiple Choice is on Sept. 12 at 8pm. You can download an application from www.scnewcomers.com or pick one up at the South Shore Community Center, Scituate/Cohasset libraries, and Purple Dinosaur/Seaside Fun playgrounds.

Men's softball - The Newcomer's Men's Softball team is still having games. All are encouraged to join in on the fun. We'll be playing Sept. 11 at 8 a.m. at the Gates Middle School baseball field. As always, feel free to bring a friend along and family members to cheer us on. For more information contact Rodney Hine at hinebiz@comcast.net.

Join the club - The Scituate/Cohasset Newcomer's Club is accepting applications for the 2005-2006 season. Remember, you don't have to be new! Catch up with old friends and make new ones in a year filled with parties and events. The Fall Kick-Off Party (for adults) is scheduled for Oct. 15. That will be followed by the December Holiday party, the March Chili-Cook off, and the end of year family BBQ in June. Other activities include monthly Ladies Night Out, Book Club, Bon Appetite Club, walking/running club and lots more! The Scituate/Cohasset Newcomer's club organizes weekly playgroups to help moms, dads, or caregivers get out once a week and make new "adult-size" and "tot-size" friends. Playgroups include a meeting at a different home each week with children-inspired seasonal events and parties throughout the year. Playgroups are scheduled to begin mid-October. Send in a membership form found at the Scituate/Cohasset libraries, South Shore Community Center, Purple Dinosaur and Seaside playgrounds. You can also visit www.scnewcomers.com and download a application or call Jen Harris at 781-544-3910 or jkharris24@hotmail.com.

Making summer camp a reality for inner-city kids

Cohasset families show they care

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

While the summer winds down and children get ready to brush off the sand and load up their backpacks for the first day of school, some Cohasset residents can feel good knowing they helped give children less fortunate than their own the opportunity to have fun in the sun.

In many inner-city neighborhoods, families have parents that work full time, and are often living in areas where it might not be safe to play outside. In light of the situation, children are often left alone during the day, missing out on play time outdoors. However, the Boys and Girls Clubs of Boston provide and a safe alternative for inner-city youths, which some Cohasset residents have banded together to support.

Cohasset residents Lisa Westcott, Emily Brown, Kristen Astley, and Susan Carrabes formed the "Cohasset Committee" to promote awareness and raise money for the Boys and Girls Club of Roxbury's summer camp program. While Roxbury may only be 18 miles away from Cohasset, there is a world of difference between the two towns, and the women wanted to do something to help.

Because there is a fee associated with sending children to the camp, some families would not be able to send their children without either full or partial financial support. In just three short months, with help from other Cohasset residents, the women raised nearly $21,500 to help send children to camp who would otherwise not be able to attend. The amount is nearly double what the group raised in 2004, and it enabled 104 campers to attend Summer Camp, either by partially or fully funding camp fees.

But in addition to fund-raising, Brown recently hosted some members of the Roxbury Club at her home for a "field trip," during which campers spent the afternoon boating and swimming.

"Our family is so appreciative of all Cohasset provides during the summer months, and we wanted to share our wonderful surroundings with others. We also enjoyed seeing our own children interact with the Roxbury kids, and despite the different home and community environments, we watched them realize how similar they are. No matter where they were from, all the kids enjoyed being together on the water, tubing, exploring the beach, or swimming in the pool," said Brown.

Children from the Boys and Girls Club of Roxbury, traveled by boat to spend a hot summer day on Horseneck Beach in Buzzards Bay, thanks to the hospitality of resident Emily Brown and her family. Brown, along with residents, Kristen Astley, Susan Carrabes, and Lisa Westcott, formed the "Cohasset Committee" to help raise awareness about the programs available for inner-city youth through the Boys and Girls Clubs of Boston.

Spokesperson for the BGCB Renee Besser said due to the efforts of Cohasset residents, one woman was able to send all five of her children to summer camp this year, which would not otherwise have been an option.

"She relied on the resources of the Club, both emotionally and financially, and truly felt the Club was helping her raise her family and provide a safe alternative from the streets," Besser said.

During the school year, the Roxbury Club has an after-school program which costs families $25 total to enroll. However, where the summer camp program is an all-day program, families are charged $490 for seven weeks, $280 for four weeks, and $140 for two weeks. There are currently five Boys and Girls Clubs in the Boston area, located in Charlestown, Chelsea, Dorchester, Roxbury and South Boston.

"The camps take kids off the streets and engage them in educational programs so they are moving forward academically during summer break, and also offer them recreational experiences to which they might not otherwise have access," said Besser.

During summer camp, Besser said a special emphasis is placed on positive alternatives including programming in education, aquatics, athletics and outdoor activities. Regularly scheduled field trips are one of the most popular components of the summer program, giving participants the opportunity to enjoy new educational, cultural and recreational experiences.

Most important, the foundation underlying the summer program is the organization's emphasis on meaningful relationships between trained youth development staff and campers, and the development of healthy and positive relationships between campers and their peers. Summer camp activities are conducted in each of BGCB's six core program areas, which work in concert to positively impact the cognitive, social, emotional, physical, and moral development of young people, Besser said.

In addition to providing fun activities for campers, BGCB sees summer camp as a way of providing work experience to young adults, who at age 13, are too old to attend summer camp. BGCB's Young Leaders (members ages 13 and 14) program allows teens to serve as "junior camp counselors" and still go to camp, yet "work" at the same time. Through participation in workshops, journal writing, forums with business leaders, community service, field trips, and discussion groups, the Young Leaders are given a unique opportunity to experience life as a "grown-up" during their crucial transition into adolescence, Besser said.

Since its founding in 1893, the BGCB has provided high-impact, affordable programs and services that enable at-risk youth from disadvantaged circumstances to mature into productive, caring and responsible adults. Today, the Boys and Girls Clubs of Boston serve nearly 12,000 young people, ages six to 18, in five Clubs throughout the Boston area, and through programs with the Boston Public Schools and the Boston Police Department.

BGCB is an affiliate of Boys & Girls Clubs of America and The United Way of Massachusetts Bay. To learn more about BGCB, please visit www.bgcb.org or call (617) 994-4700.

OBITUARIES

Margaret E. Clark

Formerly of Cohasset

Margaret E. (Silvia) Clark, 93, of Sarasota, Fla., formerly of Milford, Conn. and Cohasset, died Aug. 21, 2005, at the Hospice of Southwest Florida in Sarasota following a lengthy illness.

Born and raised in Cohasset, daughter of the late Alfred M. and Mae (Munn) Silvia, Mrs. Clark was educated in Cohasset schools.

She was employed by the State of Connecticut as an employment councilor for 40 years until the age of 70.

Mrs. Clark worked at the Quincy Shipyard during World War II.

She lived in Florida for four years.

Wife of the late William Clark of Milford, Conn., she leaves a niece, Elaine Schaible of Sarasota, Fla.; two sisters-in-law, Muriel D. Silvia of Cohasset and Vivian Silvia of Scituate; several nieces; nephews; and stepchildren. She was sister of the late Joseph A., William B. and Harry M. Silvia, Grace M. Levy and Alfred M. Silvia of Connecticut, who died on the same day.

A funeral service was held at St. Stephen Episcopal Church in Cohasset. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home in Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers, memorial gifts may be made to The Hospice of Southwest Florida, 5955 Rand Blvd., Sarasota, FL 34238; St. Stephen Episcopal Church, The Accessibility Fund, 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset 02025; or St. James United Methodist Church, 2049A North Honore Ave., Sarasota, FL 34235.

Wilhelmina C. Abbate

Dedicated Red Cross volunteer

Wilhelmina C. (Van Tiggelen) Abbate, 97, of Cohasset, died Aug. 24, 2005, at her home.

Born in Antwerp, Belgium, she also resided in Quincy for 42 years, and in Pittsfield, Fort Lauderdale, and Lake Walls, Fla.

She graduated from Holy Angels Academy, Fort Lee, N.J., and Berkshire Business College, Pittsfield.

Mrs. Abbate was a very active volunteer in the Red Cross, in Catholic churches, and in ministry to shut-ins. She was a uniquely personable, caring woman, with a deep Catholic faith.

Beloved wife of the late Jesse Carpenter for 42 years, she later married the late John Abbate. She leaves a son, Donald Carpenter and his wife Anne, of Savannah, Ga.; a daughter, Lesley Grilli and her husband Donald, of Cohasset; four grandchildren, Deborah, Roderick, Stephen, and Cynthia; and five great-grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated in St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. Interment is in Park Lawn Cemetery, Bennington, Vt. Arrangements were by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

If desired, contributions in Mrs. Abbate's memory may be made to the National Psoriasis Foundation, 6600 S.W. 92nd Ave., Suite 300, Portland, Ore., 97223; or to Glastonbury Abbey, 16 Hull St., Hingham, MA 02043.

Rockland Trust hosts food pantry drive

Rockland Trust hosts food pantry drive As part of its continued commitment its communities, Rockland Trust is currently hosting a drive to collect non-perishable food products and other items of need for local food pantries. Items will be collected at all Rockland Trust branches including Cohasset's.

"While the summer is typically a time for vacationing, it is important that we also remember those in need," said Chris Oddleifson, President and Chief Executive of Rockland Trust. "We are delighted to invite our customers, employees and other members of our communities to keep our communities strong."

Rockland Trust will collect non-perishable food items at each of its branches through September.

The Rockland Trust in Cohasset is off Route 3A at Shaw's Cushing Plaza (781.383.0150)

Notice of Class Action Settlement

Barnes v. Fleet Nat'l Bank, 01-CV-10395 (D.Mass.)

If you had a deposit account at BankBoston, N.A. and received a "change-in-terms" notice from Fleet National Bank in March or April 2000 when Fleet acquired BankBoston, you may be entitled to receive money from this class action settlement.

The parties to a class action lawsuit against Fleet National Bank have agreed to settle the lawsuit. If the Court approves the settlement, this will resolve the case and pay up to $25 per account to people who are in the class. Class counsel will seek up to 25% of the settlement fund for fees and costs.

If you received a notice in March or April 2000 that your BankBoston deposit account would become a Fleet account in connection with the Fleet-BankBoston merger, you may be a class member. Persons who had only certificates of deposit accounts are not class members. If you are a class member, you must send a claim form by January 16, 2006 to receive a share of the settlement fund.

A notice describing the proposed settlement, the right to opt out of the class or object to the settlement and a claim form for benefits is available from the settlement website, www.changeintermsettlement.com or by writing to the Settlement Administrator at: P.O. Box 37018, Philadelphia, PA 19122. Your deadline to opt out or object is October 27, 2005. A fairness hearing for the settlement is scheduled for November 16, 2005 at 2:30 p.m. at the U.S. Courthouse, 1 Courthouse Way, Boston, Massachusetts, Courtroom 2.

'The Odyssey,' 2005

Next week, as those familiar yellow buses head down the street and walkers set off in pairs and groups, an odyssey begins for each child and teen entering school doors.

The new school year is a new beginning for every one.

One meaning for the word "odyssey" is an extensive intellectual quest.

Another meaning for odyssey is a series of adventurous journeys marked by many changes

The word comes from the title of the long epic poem by the 8th century Greek poet Homer recounting the saga of Odysseus on his way home from the siege on Troy.

The journeys our students embark on are both intellectual quests and a series of adventures marked by many changes.

Each level of learning brings new challenges.

Little ones entering preschool and kindergarten are just beginning their journeys to the new world.

So many changes.

Some are away from home without mom for hours for the first time.

They are learning names of colors, the alphabet, and numbers.

They are beginning to learn how to learn.

They are beginning important developmental and social tasks as they pursue skills in independence and in knowing who is safe to trust, and how to make friends and be a friend. In a multi-ethnic society, respecting differences in appearance and in culture is an important lesson, as children realize that, no matter how different we look on the outside or how we walk or talk, we're all the same on the inside.

This first stage of away-from-home learning is also a critical diagnostic time for identifying special needs and special talents, so that all children can receive the help needed to rise to their potential. The earlier that any disabilities are detected, the more effective intervention is.

This also holds true for talented and gifted children, who need to have access to resources so they can develop academically at what may be a speedier rate than their peers. The two special lessons talented and gifted children need to learn over the years is that it's not how great intellect is that counts, but how intellect is applied; and, that while they work hard to make the most of their gift, their IQ is a gift, and other children have gifts that are just as important.

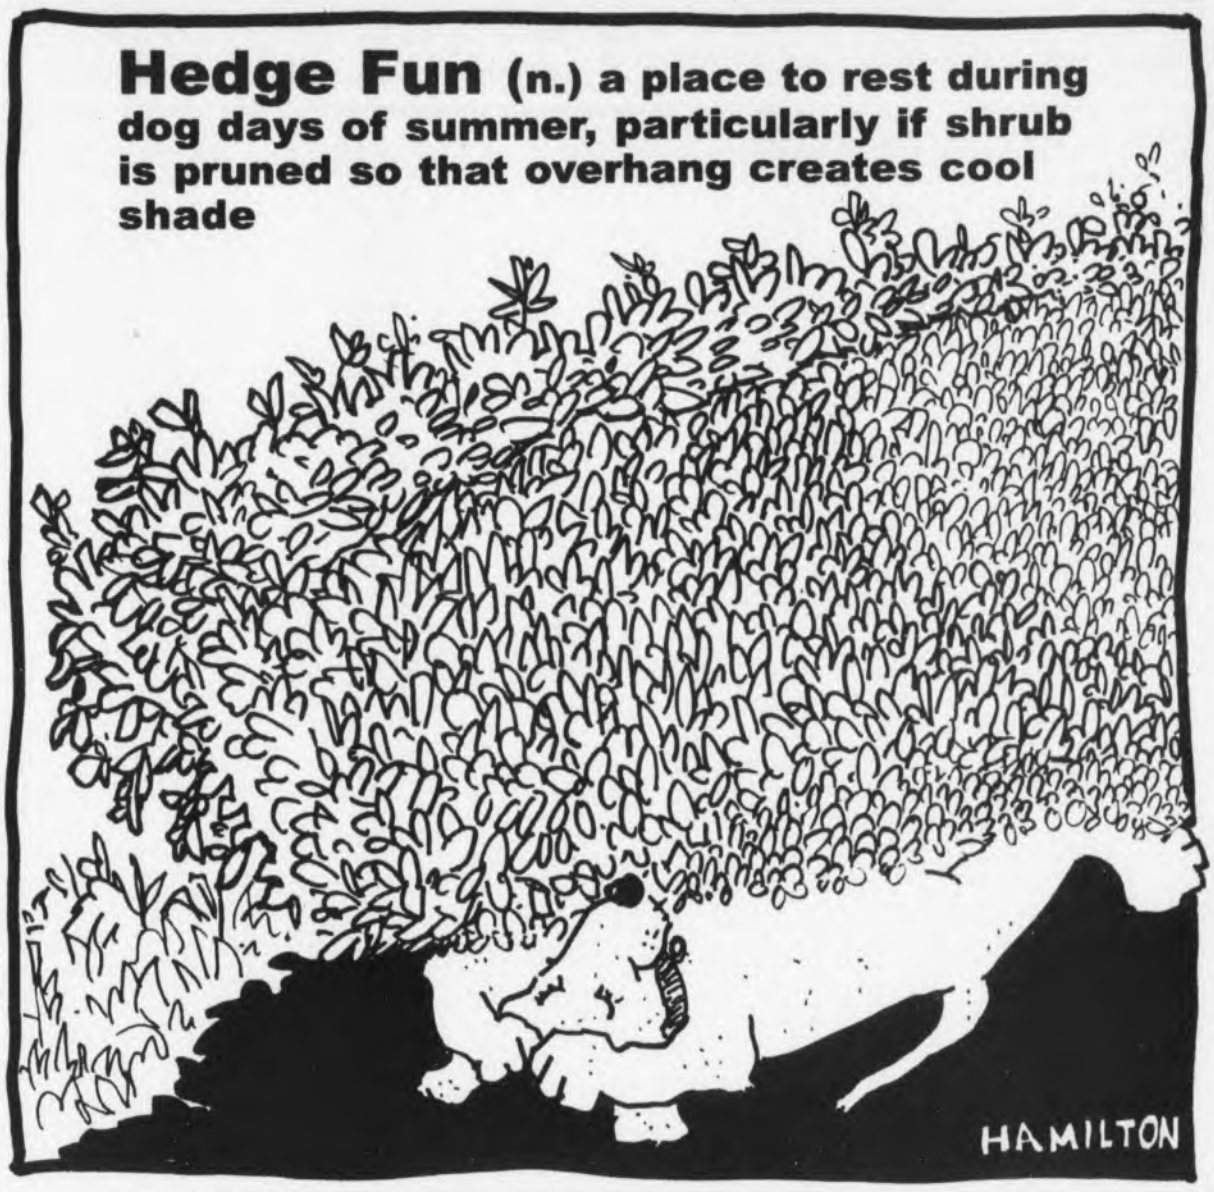
Middle school students continue their journeys and begin a new adventure. As they mature, they suddenly find themselves in the transitional stage between childhood and adulthood. They buy a ticket for a roller coaster ride of emotional ups and downs. They are confronted by pressures from society, both positive — to be the best they can be — and negative, from peers who are sliding into destructive experimentation such as with drugs. For the first time, the question of who they are becomes pressing, as self-identities develop. A critical task is developing a sense of doing well at something that brings a feeling of control over their lives, a feeling of personal power and confidence.

Then comes the competition of high school and the need to determine where they can find their success. This is when the big decisions are no longer on the horizon, but imminent. Decisions on getting into college or finding a job.

In their senior year, students embark on the last adventure of their odyssey.

Until graduation, when a new adventure begins.

Readers invited to sign up



The Cohasset Mariner is building a Readers Advisory Network of e-mail addresses so we can more frequently involve our readers in the content of the newspaper.

Readers, who join the network, may be asked for reactions to stories, ideas for stories or follow-ups, for a digital "person on the street" interview, or for a community commentary.

If you are interested in becoming a member of the network, email Mary Ford at mford@cnc.com. She will answer any questions that you may have. The Mariner promises to remove you immediately from the Readers Advisory Network if you request that we do.

FAST FACTS

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library has approximately 62,169 books (8.51 books per capita) and 144 periodical subscriptions (including both magazines and newspapers). The library circulated 127,734 items in 2004. Ninety-five percent of Cohasset residents hold library cards.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Grateful for generosity

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing to thank the many people of Cohasset who supported our fundraising efforts for the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. All tolled, the DFCI running team was able to exceed $100,000 in donations, with our individual tally close to $12,000. A strong effort by so many generous people here in town — thank you all who supported us with donations and good wishes.

Please note that if you would like to also make a donation, you may still do so on-line by going to www.JimmyFund.com, choosing the Falmouth Road Race event, click on "support a DF runner", and enter my name to get to our fundraising page. The web site will be closed soon, so please don't delay.

Again, thanks to all who made this year such a success — it was an honor to run for you and the Dana-Farber

Anti-war vigil energizes opponents to conflict

TO THE EDITOR:

Carrying a sign that reads "Don't 'Misunderestimate' Our President's 'Strategery' in Iraq. Question It." I attended a candlelight vigil in Cohasset Wednesday (Aug. 24) with more than 100 other people.

It was refreshing, and energizing, to stand together with such a large number of people in the center of Cohasset, home to 8,000 residents, in support of Cindy Sheehan, the mother of one of the more than 1,862 soldiers who have died so far in Iraq, and to oppose this war and the occupation of Iraq.

There were 100,000 people across the United States doing as the more than 100 of us were doing in Cohasset — uniting in our opposition to the senseless, immoral and unjustified war on Iraq which, as we have come to learn, has been based on lies. The tides are turning, with more than half of all Americans now opposing the war. Our democracy demands that we continue to question what our leaders and representatives say and do.

Practical good sense

TO THE EDITOR:

Jim Shipsky's column in the Aug. 26 Mariner about the issues at Sandy Beach demonstrates once again that there is a voice here among us which deserves to be listened to. His concern about protecting the dune by protecting the plants in the dune makes practical good sense.

It would help to prevent sand from drifting into the parking lot and at the same time enhance the appearance of the beach. Ecology and practicality are by no means mutually exclusive.

Taking the time to be conscious and aware

FAITH REFLECTIONS

DR. SUSAN SCHRAGER

Recently, I read Carl Honore's book, "In Praise of Slowness: How a Worldwide Movement is Challenging the Cult of Speed." Everyone feels the pressure of trying to handle too much in too little time. Most of the demands are stressful, even if enjoyable. Many feel overwhelmed, as if we are unable to out swim the tide. This book is a pleasant tour of a different way of living in the 21st century.

We may neither desire nor be able to design a total revolution in our lives, but we may be able to implement a few suggestions that will loosen the gridlock in which we find ourselves and bring us some inner peace and happiness. Chapters are focused on a more leisurely approach to food, urban living, the mind-body relationship, medicine, sex, work, leisure and children.

I remember a wonderful column by Ellen Goodman who reminded us that we have a finite number of lilac seasons during our lifetime. How many of us mentally take note of the lilacs when they are in full bloom and let their majestic few weeks of delicate, fragrant loveliness pass away without making a concerted effort to include them in our lives each day while they are here?

I remember a wonderful column by Ellen Goodman who reminded us that we have a finite number of lilac seasons during our lifetime.

The same is true of autumn. We also have a finite number of autumn-appreciating opportunities in this lifetime. How many have we left? Let us make time each day to walk and to notice the minute changes in foliage which each day brings. Autumn is such a sensory feast. We need to consciously breathe in the fragrance that is unique to this time, to consciously experience the crunch of crisp leaves under our footsteps; to consciously savor the clarity of the sunlight in the afternoon; to consciously appreciate the spectacular beauty of special trees as if it was the first time we have ever seen such richness.

This slowing down to appreciate living doesn't necessarily involve taking days of vacation time. It requires making the time and being conscious and aware. These experiences nourish our inner being.

"Slowness" doesn't mean sluggishness and inefficiency. It means being sure that our lives include those elements that are our real treasure. Otherwise, we come to the end of this life, jump off the hamster wheel and find that we have missed out on so much beauty, so many wonderful hours and shared experiences with those whom we really love.

The "Slow Movement," for example, might mean turning off the television, knowing that really important news will get through to us somehow, and reconnecting with the earth creating and maintaining our own garden, doing a hobby we love, or creating art. It might include setting aside a day a week when we shop as if we were in Tuscany and have a lovingly prepared fresh meal in as beautiful a setting as we can put together and enjoying it with those we love. It might mean driving at the speed limit and enjoying the ride. It might mean walking for sensory enjoyment once a week, not just for exercise.

Life is rushing us along. Let us root out the non-essentials. We owe it to ourselves to step off the train whenever we can to savor all the beauty around us and to create simple occasions to spend leisurely hours with our family and friends.

The Rev. Dr. Susan Schrager, Minister of the Vedanta Centre in Cohasset. This is one in a monthly series by members of the Cohasset Clergy Association.

HEALTH NOTES

'Built' environment is making us fat

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

How are we building our Town?

The experts are clear. Many studies have clearly shown that walking — the cheapest, easiest and most common physical activity for most Americans — reduces risk for many deadly diseases. And yet, inducements to walk have regularly been removed by the way we're building our communities in the name of progress.

Since 1960, the number of people commuting to work out of the county they live in jumped by 200 percent. Residential "sprawl" has meant a 250 percent increase in vehicle miles traveled. The average driver spends 443 hours yearly behind the wheel, the equivalent of 11 workweeks.

Well, cheer up folks, help is on the way.

Driving displaces other activities, like exercise. "Being in a car doesn't do anything for you in terms of being thin," says Lawrence Frank of the University of British Columbia. "For every additional hour people spend in the car, there's a 6 percent increase in the likelihood of being obese."

Now, what in the world would induce people to drive a little less, and walk a little more?

Childhood obesity has more than doubled in three decades. But the number of kids who walk or bike to school has dropped from nearly half in 1960 to about one in 10 today, largely because schools are far from homes.

The average driver spends 443 hours yearly behind the wheel, the equivalent of 11 workweeks.

Research on the health effects of the "built environment" — as roads, buildings, and manmade structures are called — is in its infancy. But a growing number of scientists are looking beyond symptoms and treatments to see how aspects of social planning such as zoning, transportation, school siting, contribute to rising rates of obesity, diabetes, asthma, and other diseases.

An effort to save older neighborhood schools and to build the new ones smaller is gaining strength. In addition, an international program called Safe Routes to School works in communities to make walking and biking to school easier.

What's going to induce people to change their eating habits and possibly get our kids back on bikes? Adam Drewnowski, an epidemiologist at the University of Washington says, "We're not going to solve these problems by telling people to eat larger portions of broccoli."

But wait, how about gas prices? Suddenly, with gas approaching $3 a gallon and vehicle mileage at 20 miles per gallon, how many people are going to say: "What's wrong here? Will higher gas prices help drive change?" At $3 a gallon and 20mpg and a car which has a capacity of say, 20 gallons, every fill up costs $60 which will let the car go 400 miles. Fuel mileage in suburban driving is less economical; say 15 mpg or 300 miles. What price will gas have to achieve for someone to say "this is crazy"? For three fill-ups, it would be possible to buy a very good bike.

In many ways, focusing on the environment is returning public health to its roots.

"If you go back 100 years ago, urban design and public health were integrally related — housing, sanitation, water, disease," says Allen Dearry, associate director of the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences.

But it requires researchers to take their eye off the national picture and look closely at local communities. For towns like Cohasset where "progress" has caused us to build "convenience driving" into our infrastructure, it's necessary for us to work at making exercise a part of our daily life by beginning, perhaps with the help of more expensive gas, to change our ideas about driving everywhere so that walking and using a bike become the norm here now rather than the oddity.

It's time for Melanie's Bill to become law

HEDLUND REPORT

ROBERT HEDLUND

Recently, Governor Romney, members of the legislature and the media have turned their attention to the issue of our drunk driving laws.

I was present with Governor Romney when he filed "Melanie's Bill" in late May and I joined the Governor and the Powell family's effort to pass stronger laws intended to protect innocent citizens from repeat drunk drivers.

In August, I helped organize a bipartisan group of legislators to support the Governor's efforts. A hearing date is now scheduled for Sept. 13 at 1p.m. in the Gardner Auditorium at the State House.

I was enthusiastic when Governor Romney filed Melanie's Bill because this legislation does much to change the current laws on drunk driving and place the most difficult restraints on repeat offenders.

When I first reviewed the bill, I wanted to be sure that it was not a knee-jerk response to recent highly publicized cases of repeat drunk drivers. The issue of drunk driving needed to be addressed wholly and responsibly for my support of Melanie's Bill.

In the past, I have generally not supported legislation that takes away sentencing discretion from judges. I also voted against the so called "Breathalyzer Bill", which would have made an individual's refusal to take breathalyzer test admissible evidence in court. I believe this bill was unconstitutional. The bill eventually passed the Senate, but in fact was ruled unconstitutional by the State Supreme Court.

To become an advocate for Melanie's Bill, I required complete assurance that civil liberties would not be hindered. Additionally, I needed clarity and certainty that the bill would impair repeat drunk drivers and serve as a preventative measure against future drunk driving.

There are two provisions in the bill that I have concern with: increasing the suspension period for people who refuse the breathalyzer or field sobriety test and allowing judges to seize and impound the vehicle of repeat offenders

I am concerned with these provisions because they raise constitutional issues regarding our Fifth Amendment right about self incrimination and Fourth Amendment right about unreasonable searches and seizures.

These provisions will likely be dropped by the Judiciary Committee next month as they review the proposal.

It will help to reduce the possibility of pain to a family who is victim at the hands of uncaring, harmful individuals who get behind the wheel when they should be in the backseat of a cab.

With those two exceptions, I believe and know Melanie's Bill is right for Massachusetts. Today, I feel confident that the Governor has given the legislature the foundation of an excellent bill that addresses my initial concerns and implements stiff penalties on drunk drivers. The legislature owes it to the community to have this act be voted on.

This legislature has the potential to enact a law that will significantly reduce the likelihood of death because of a drunk driver. That is the most important part of this bill. It will help to reduce the possibility of pain to a family who is victim at the hands of uncaring, harmful individuals who get behind the wheel when they should be in the backseat of a cab.

Melanie's Bill is named for Melanie Powell, a 13-year-old resident of Marshfield, a constituent of mine, who was struck and killed by a repeat drunk driving offender July 26, 2003 during a summer afternoon. I've spoken with the family of Melanie and other families who have been victimized by repeat drunk driving offenders. I know the importance of this bill to them and I was moved to circulate a letter to my colleagues in the Senate and House of Representatives advocating for Melanie's Bill. Sixty-seven legislators, Republicans and Democrats, signed onto my letter in support for Melanie's Bill.

Also, only a few weeks ago, I met with Christine Leone and her nine-year-old son Nicholas from Quincy. Nicholas is a survivor of a drunk driving crash. A year ago, a repeat offender slammed into the boy who was riding a scooter on the sidewalk. Nicholas suffered broken bones in his left leg and needed five steel rods placed in the leg. He is lucky to be walking today.

As recently as July 24, another traffic crash was caused by a driver operating under the influence, leaving a mother and infant daughter from Quincy in critical condition. The mother has since been released from the hospital. The newborn daughter died in the hospital a month later. (The driver had been found guilty of drunk driving on four prior incidences and still continued to drive with a revoked license raising the most recent public awareness of Melanie's Bill.)

It's quite obvious that those reckless drivers who break the law repeatedly find loopholes and ways to return to the road. Massachusetts needs a law that curbs and closes loopholes. That is what Melanie's Bill will accomplish.

According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) nearly 1 person every 30 minutes dies of an alcohol-related crash. In 2004, 16,694 people were killed nationwide. In Massachusetts, over 200 victims died of alcohol-related deaths.

How many more victims need to be at the hands of drunk drivers in our state?

Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) supports legislation that proves as deterrents to drunk driving. Their spokesman David Deluliis has said, "Passing Melanie's Bill will help to hold people responsible and provide meaningful consequences for those who choose to commit this violent crime."

Here are the highlights of Melanie's Bill.

• Melanie's Bill creates a crime of manslaughter by motor vehicle which allows prosecutors to charge offenders with the more serious crime of manslaughter while still the offender faces license suspension. (Currently individuals convicted of manslaughter in a motor vehicle do not lose their driver's license.)

• The bill creates an additional crime of driving under the influence with a child under the age of 16 in the car.

• The bill creates an additional crime of aggravated drunk driving for anyone with a blood alcohol content of .20 or higher, which is more than twice the legal limit.

• Melanie's Bill is particularly tougher on repeat drunk driving offenders. For example, it increases the minimum penalties for repeat offenders by requiring all repeat offenders to install an ignition-interlocking device on their vehicle as a condition of having their license reinstated.

The provisions of Melanie's Bill are for the betterment of everyone in the Commonwealth. Last year, the legislature failed to get a final enactment on legislation similar to this before the legislative session ran out. I do not want that to happen again.

State Senator Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, is represents the Plymouth and Norfolk District that includes Hingham, Cohasset, Hull, Norwell, Weymouth, Scituate, Marshfield and Duxbury.

Not surprised by Pat Robertson

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I was only 18 months old when they "kidnapped" Aimee Semple McPherson but I think I can trace my skepticism of radio and television evangelists back to that day.

That's why I wasn't entirely surprised the other day when Pat Robertson, on the Christian Broadcasting Network, suggested it was time for someone to take up his Uzi and assassinate Hugo Chavez, the duly elected president of Venezuela.

I thought for a moment I had tuned in to the Osama bin Laden Show on Al Jazeera.

Don't get me wrong, now. Some evangelists are Christian in more than just name. Take Billy Graham, for instance. The only complaint I ever heard about him came from denizen of The Block in Baltimore who moaned that his fleshpots weren't as productive after a Graham crusade passed through.

But there are evangelists of the radio and television variety that seem to have been born with a Size 12 EEE in their mouths.

But there are evangelists of the radio and television variety that seem to have been born with a Size 12 EEE in their mouths.

I suppose most of you remember Jimmy Bakker, host of the TV show "the PTL Club," which stood for either "Praise the Lord" or "Pass the Loot," depending on whether you were viewing it from the choir loft or the bank vault.

He parlayed PTL into a $150 million religiously themed resort with a TV studio, a 304-room hotel, an executive office building, a shopping mall, campsites, condominiums and a water park.

Then he met church secretary Jessica Hahn in Room 538 of the Sheraton Sand Key Motel in Clearwater, Fla., for two hours of "counseling" which cost PTL an up front payment of $115,000 and touched off an investigation of PTL finances that sent Bakker to the slammer for four and a half years.

Remember the Rev. Jimmy Swaggart, too, the cousin of rocker Jerry Lee Lewis, who condemned Bakker's scandalous behavior — until the day he too was trapped en flagrante delecto with a working girl in a Louisiana motel.

Aimee Semple McPherson is a little to far back for most of you to remember. She founded the Angelus Temple in Los Angeles to preach the "Four Square Gospel" and was raking it in when she up and vanished one day in 1926.

While the faithful scoured the West for her or her body, Aimee suddenly appeared one day a month later, claiming she had been kidnapped and held in a shack in the desert from which she escaped and fled across the burning desert.

But authorities couldn't find the shack or any sunburn she might have acquired in the burning desert, and inquisitive reporters located a number of hotels in which a couple resembling Aimee and her lover, Ken Ormiston, had registered.

Sister Aimee resumed her preaching career but somehow it was not the same.

And, lest Catholics feel left out of this evangelism thing, there was Father Charles Coughlin, who preached a blend of politics, economics and religion from his pulpit at the Shrine of the Little Flower in Royal Oak, Mich. His Sunday afternoon radio hour had more than 30 million listeners at one time.

His sermons were anti-Semitic, anti-Roosevelt, anti-banker and anti-communist. He helped form the Union Party to run William Lemke against FDR in 1936. He supported Fritz Kuhn, fuhrer of the openly pro-Nazi German American Bund. Finally, with World War II at hand, the Vatican told him to sit down and shut up. He did.

Editor shares local insights

The new preschool program will be integrated, which means typically developing children will be in the same classroom with their peers who are in the special education program. The preschool is a tuition-based program, and the cost per student is $1,500 per year, paid on a quarterly basis.

In addition to the new preschool, there will be new full-day kindergarten classes. Sheehan said there will be five full-day kindergarten classes and one half-day kindergarten class. Parents will pay $1,800 tuition for the full-day program, while the half-day is free.

To accommodate for the new programs, there will be five new teachers. Three new teachers will become part of the kindergarten program, while two new teachers will be in the preschool classrooms.

"They are all top-notch, high-quality dynamos," Sheehan said, adding all the kindergarten and preschool teachers have been working very hard to prepare for the beginning of the new programs.

With the expansion of the kindergarten program, Sheehan said there is now enough time during the day to offer those youngsters a health class every week. She said she is currently meeting with the health teacher to iron out the specifics for the class. Sheehan said basic health topics such as nutrition and personal hygiene will be taught.

For students in kindergarten through grade two, the Scott Foresman reading program will be introduced. Sheehan said preschool students will be taught similar early literature readiness lessons which will be good preparation for the reading program students begin in kindergarten.

Sheehan said the teachers are very excited about beginning the new program, and they were looking forward to attending a professional development workshop with a representative from Scott Foresman publishing Thursday, after the Mariner went to press.

"That should allow them to be up and running either the first week or right at the beginning of the school year," Sheehan said, adding the school department is currently working on coming up with a professional development schedule for staff members.

With the start of full-day kindergarten, there will not be as great a need for the KEDS enrichment program. KEDS provided in-school activities for students who attended half-day kindergarten, for the half of the day they were not in class. With only one half-day kindergarten class, Sheehan said she has yet to determine whether keeping the KEDS program alive will be feasible.

"We're going to send out an interest survey," which will assess the needs of the community, and if the responses indicate there are enough families to make the program feasible, the KEDS program will continue. But Sheehan said the before-school and after-school programs which were run in addition to the KEDS program will remain in place.

The school day for Osgood students begins at 9:05 a.m. and ends at 3:05 p.m. There will be a "drop off line" for parents bringing their children to school in the morning, which will run through the parking lot to the left side of the building near the cafeteria and playground. School begins Sept. 6 for grades one and two, and kindergarten students will attend orientation Sept. 6 and 7. The first day for kindergarten is Sept. 8.

STAFF PHOTOS/ROBIN CHAN

Second-grade teacher Diane Barbieri organizes her class library by genre while getting her classroom ready for the new school year at Osgood.

Lunch for students at the Osgood School is $2.25, and Tuesday's menu includes chicken nuggets and a dinner roll or a turkey sub with oven fries. There will be pudding for dessert. Each meal offers a choice of milk (whole, low fat white, or chocolate), or fruit juice.

Deer Hill

Next door at the Deer Hill School, Principal Keith Gauley is just as eager to begin the new year as Sheehan.

"Summer was gone in a heartbeat," he said, but added there are a number of new programs and teachers to be excited about for the coming year.

The Osgood School has plans to begin the new Scott Foresman reading program, and Gauley said he is happy his school will also be piloting the program. He said while full reading kits were not able to be purchased this year, teachers will be given materials to teach the skills and concepts of the Foresman program. He said this program will help build on what students have already learned in the earlier grades.

"This is the most exciting news of the year," said Gauley.

Gauley said more enrichment programs beginning after school is another exciting initiative. He said in light of the decrease in need for the KEDS program at the Osgood School, he has been able to borrow the expertise of KEDS director Liz Alpert, who has helped him plan after-school enrichment activities for his older students. Activities for Deer Hill students will take place during the time period which spans from the end of the Deer Hill school day to the end of the Osgood school day, roughly from 2:15 to 3:15.

While Gauley said there are already some excellent after-school programs in place for students, including a large amount of participation in chorus and band and after-school art, he hopes new programs will help even more students find enrichment. He said there will likely be a new chapter of Destination ImagiNation which focuses on problem solving, new technologically based activities, and students may even begin creating their own Deer Hill newsletter.

"There will also definitely be after-school book discussion groups," he said.

Gauley said for many years, the school has partnered up with the Recreation Department to offer after-school activities, and the new programs at Deer Hill will coordinate with those programs. He said he has been in contact with Recreation Department director Jack Worley and there will be a collaborative effort to offer as many programs for students as possible, many of which will begin in early October, to give students enough time to register.

In addition to the new programs, there will be new teachers on board as well. One position will be permanent, while the other two will be long-term substitutes, filling in for teachers on maternity leave.

The new permanent teacher joining the Deer Hill staff is Meghan O'Hara, who will be serving as a first grade special education teacher. Arna Lewis will be filling in for one year in the third grade, and Meredith Shafer will spend the next year in grade five.

The first day of school for all Deer Hill student is Tuesday, Sept. 6. Parents may begin dropping students off as early as 8 a.m., although the official start of the school day will not be until 8:10 a.m. Gauley said parents may drop their children off at the rear of the building as usual. However, in the case traffic is backed up onto Sohier Street, rather than add to the chaos, Gauley said parents may bring students around to the front of the building.

Lunch for students at Deer Hill is $2.50, and Tuesday's menu includes chicken nuggets and a dinner roll or a turkey sub with oven fries. There will be pudding for dessert. Each meal offers a choice of milk (whole, low fat white, or chocolate), or fruit juice.

Continuing the tradition he began one year ago, Gauley said students will "walk the red carpet" again this year. At the conclusion of the school day, students will gather for an assembly in the gymatorium. As they exit the building from their first day back, they will walk down a red carpet they way a movie star would do. The school day ends at 2:10 p.m.

Middle-High School

There have been some significant changes in administration at the middle-high school. At the middle school, Beth Sternala has come on board as the new assistant principal, and Joel Antolini has come on board as the new principal of the collective middle-high school.

While busily preparing for the first day of school, Antolini was unavailable for comment, but Sternala said she has been working closely with Antolini and high school assistant principal Mike Gill on initiatives for the school for the upcoming year.

Sternala said she cannot wait for the first day of school.

"It was great to have time to settle in over the summer, but it's different when it all comes to life the first day. It makes all the work and planning worthwhile," she said.

Last year, the sixth grade was moved up to become a part of the middle school, and the goal ever since has been to create a new middle school culture separate from the high school, although the two share a building. Sternala has come on board to help bring that new identity to life.

"We're working on it as a team, and trying to create an identity for the middle-school," she said, adding she is looking to administrators, teachers, and parents to find the school's niche.

Sternala has many long-term goals she would like to bring forth, but said they will take place in due time. To start, she said she would like to increase communication with parents, recognizing middle school students are at an age when "less verbal communication comes home."

This year, she would like to begin an e-mail distribution list for parents that would provide regular updates on middle school goings-on. In addition, Sternala said she recognizes the importance of having the Connect-Ed technology available to her as a means of sending a message home via telephone.

She said she also hopes to meet with students in every class to let them know there is always someone they can come to, whether it be an administrator, guidance counselor, or teacher, and explain the different roles each one has so they know what to expect from each.

"They should have high expectations from us," she said.

In addition, Sternala said bringing new extra-curricular activities to the middle school is another future goal. She said the school already has after-school intramural clubs, and she hopes in the future to expand on those to provide more activities for students that are not necessarily athletic-based. She said programs like that give students another opportunity to interact with each other on a more informal level, as well as teachers who lead the programs.

Antolini's principal's newsletter posted on the school's Web site outlined his expectations for the new year and his excitement at once again being a part of the Cohasset school community. Antolini, who comes to Cohasset having previously served as principal of Holbrook Junior-Senior High School, served as a technology education teacher as well as track coach in Cohasset from September 1991 through June 1995.

"It is my pleasure to once again be a part of the educational community of Cohasset. The community has long enjoyed a reputation of providing diverse learning experiences with high expectations in a nurturing environment for all its students," he stated.

Antolini said the mission of the school is to prepare students physically, emotionally, and academically by developing their ability to think critically and creatively about the past, present, and future. He too mentioned the desire to offer more extra-curricular activities to help round out the educational experience for students.

"I look forward to the numerous opportunities I will have to develop personal relationships with students, parents, and staff, and to expand the educational programs and opportunities for many years to come!"

Lunch prices for students at the middle high school vary depending on the purchase. The school has a food-court style cafeteria with entrees, a deli, and a salad bar for students to choose from.

On Sept. 6 only, the school day will begin for sixth grade students at 7:50 a.m., which is the normal start time for the middle-high school. That first day only, students in grades seven through 12 will be on a two-hour delay schedule, and will begin at 9:50 a.m. Wednesday, Sept. 7, all students will report to school at 7:50 a.m. Parents who are driving their children may drop off students at either the middle or high school entrance. The school day ends at 2:36 p.m.

Swimming prohibited at Sandy Beach

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Summer may not feel like it's over just yet, but for beach-goers hoping to get in a few more dips in the ocean, Sandy Beach is currently not an option.

Samples collected Tuesday by Tara Tradd of the board of health office, indicate there are currently high levels of enterococci in the water— the red flag when testing for bacteria at town beaches. The board of health takes water samples around town every Tuesday.

"The micro-organism we test for is enterococci, and the maximum contaminant for beach closure is any result over 104," said Tradd. Sandy beach came back with a level of 136.

President of the Sandy Beach Association Robin Lawrence said this is the first time he can ever recall Sandy Beach being closed due to high bacteria counts.

"It's very unusual," he said, adding because Sandy Beach is open ocean, there is constant flushing of the water. He said usually, high levels of bacteria are caused by a big storm, where runoff from nearby land carries animal droppings into the water, elevating levels. However, Sandy Beach doesn't have that kind of runoff. He said an area like Sandy Cove — which is the worst offender with levels at 7,600 — makes sense because it is closed in from the open ocean.

Lawrence said the most likely cause of the bacteria at Sandy Beach, is that the wind and currents carried water over from the harbor. The Sailing Club and Bassing Beach are currently closed due to high levels of enterococci, as testing came in at 1,900. The Yacht Club's levels were even higher at 3,300.

"That's the only explanation I can think of," he said, adding tests from Black Rock Beach, which is only a couple of miles away from Sandy Beach, and is also open ocean, but farther away from the harbor, came back with a level of 16, which means it is safe and open for swimming. Little Harbor tested at 33 (sampling point is Cunningham's Bridge), meaning its waters are also safe.

Health effects related to swimming in polluted waters could include ear infections, conjunctivitis and rashes. The most common ailment is gastro-intestinal disorders, stemming from swimmers swallowing water.

Tradd took a re-sample at Sandy Beach Thursday morning after the Mariner went to press. Lawrence said he expected when the results of that test came back Friday, the waters would once again be safe for swimming.

Cohasset Associates won't take 'No' for an answer on Cook direct violation of M.G.L. c. 30B, the State Procurement Act, and that the proposal selected fails to meet the terms, conditions, and guidelines of the Request for Proposal and article four of the Special Town Meeting held Nov. 17 and 18, 2003, and the representations made by the board of selectmen at Special Town Meeting to the inhabitants of the Town of Cohasset," the letter states.

At the November 2003 Special Town Meeting, voters passed a motion which allowed the town to purchase the Cook land off Sohier Street for $4.5 million, to be marketed with the town's adjacent land, with the intention of selling the parcels together for a profit. The developer was required to file the project under the town's Senior Multi-family Overlay Residence District bylaw.

Northland Residential was awarded the original bid on the project in March 2004, but wastewater problems on the site required the project be scaled back to accommodate wastewater on site. The project was then sent back out to bid, and three bidders — Cohasset Associates, Deer Hill Partners, and Northland Residential — all responded.

The board voted to tentatively award the project to Deer Hill Partners on Aug. 16, pending successful negotiations of a land disposition agreement — an agreement similar to a purchase and sale. Bid proposals were ranked according to a point system outlined in the Request for Proposals, which outlined project qualities the town would like to see in proposals. Deer Hill Partners came out on top with a total of 410.03 points. Cohasset Associates received 392.13, and Northland Residential received 374.76.

Cohasset Associates claims Deer Hill Partners did not adhere to the guidelines set forth in the RFP. Humphreys' letter states the deviations in Deer Hill's proposal from the RFP are numerous and substantial. In the company's opinion, the most substantial problems with Deer Hill's bid are:

- The Town Meeting vote and the RFP require rental units — the Deer Hill Partners proposal has no rental units;
- The RFP required all buildings over 6,000 square feet to be minimized and appear as large homes — the Deer Hill Partners proposal includes one, 42,900 square foot Manor House building on the most prominent area of the land;
- Article four of the Special Town Meeting and the RFP requires the project to conform to the Senior Multi-family Overlay District bylaw. The bylaw requires multi-family dwellings — the Deer Hill Partners proposal contains 25 single family homes;
- The RFP specifically provided that no due diligence period would be allowed as a contingency to a proposal — the Deer Hill Partners proposal has a 30 day due diligence contingency; and
- The RFP required a 75-foot setback from Sohier Street — Deer Hill Partners proposes a 50-foot setback.

While Cohasset Associates contends rental units are required both by the RFP and the Town Meeting vote, that may not be the case. Town Counsel Paul DeRensis would not comment on the Cook matter. However, the RFP is a public document available for viewing at Town Hall and it states in regards to permitted housing, "Minimum age: 55; and there is a preference for a combination of affordable rental and sale, but willing to consider alternatives."

Cohasset Associates claims Deer Hill Partners did not adhere to the guidelines set forth in the RFP.

In addition, the Town Meeting vote taken in November 2003 which authorized the town to begin working with a developer to build on the Cook Estate, has no specific wording pertaining to rentals. It only states the land must be used to build senior housing "In accordance with the Town of Cohasset's Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District bylaw, and/or conservation purposes."

While Cohasset Associates states the senior overlay bylaw requires multi-family dwellings, planning board chairman Al Moore said it is his opinion and the opinion of the board that multi-family dwellings are not required under the bylaw. In fact, the Cedarmere development has a number of detached condominiums which the board has approved, he said.

Taking a look at the bylaw, Section 16.4 states the following uses are permitted: "Any combination of single family, two-family, and multi-family residential structures."

In addition, Moore said the bylaw does not require any rental units be part of a senior overlay project. He said the bylaw only requires 25 percent of the units in any given project be affordable, but affordable for sale units qualify. Moore said Cedarmere has also been approved without any rental units.

In addition, the RFP states, "The town will consider proposals for housing for seniors of a variety of building types and ownership models."

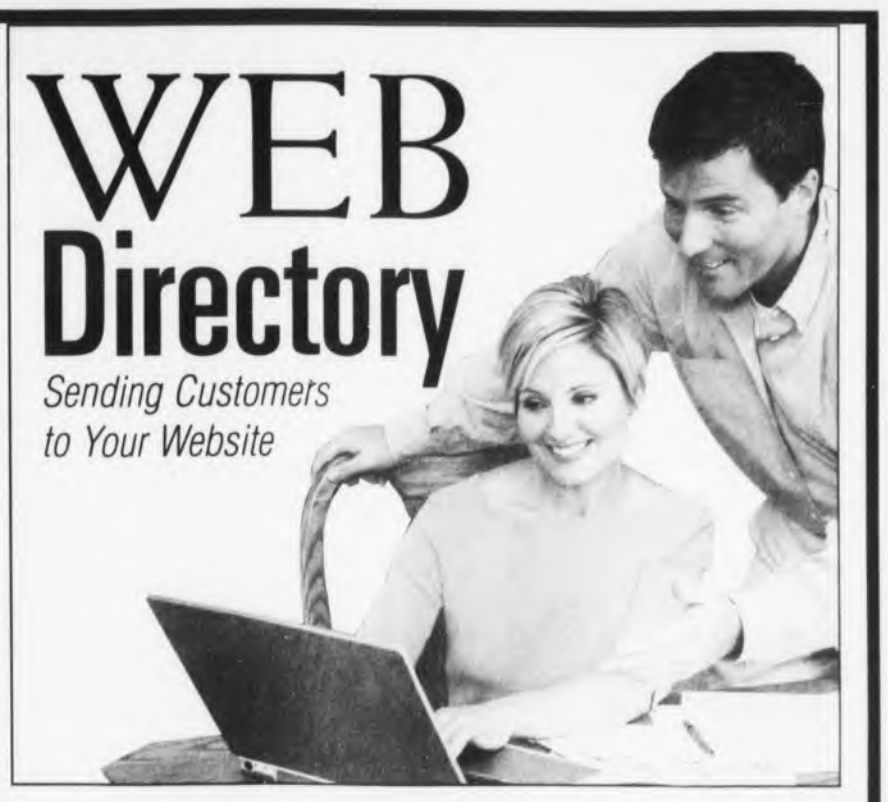
However, at the November 2003 Town Meeting, Selectmen Michael Sullivan presented the article to Town Meeting, and said the town was looking to partner with a developer to build 85-units of senior housing, including market-rate and affordable units. Sullivan explained at the time the town was planning to have roughly 14 affordable apartments for low-income residents, and 14 rentals for moderate-income residents, for a total of 28 affordable rental units. He said while developers would be drafting their own proposals, and the actual number of units would likely differ from what the town originally proposed, the RFP would give guidelines for contractors to follow, and 28 affordables with 85 total units was the goal of the town. Cohasset Associates believes the vote was passed keeping those statements in mind.

Cohasset Associate's project includes 65 total units, of which 24 are rental apartments. Twenty of the apartments are affordable rentals. Deer Hill's project has 14 affordables, all of which are for-sale units. Staszko also owns land adjacent to the Cook property and his bid submission included a supplemental proposal which would allow the project to use his land for additional wastewater capacity, and to build an additional 20 units, therefore increasing the number of total units to 85. There would have been 10 affordable rental apartments, eight market-rate for sale town homes, and two market rate rental apartments added to the project with the supplemental bid. If the town had decided to explore that option, the alternate bid was $5.95 million.

In regards to the size of the main building on Deer Hill's plans, the exact wording in the RFP states, "To the extent larger buildings exceeding 6,000 square feet are included, the scale of these buildings should be broken down to appear similar to larger Cohasset residences." The wording would allow the board of selectmen to be somewhat subjective.

In addition, while Cohasset Associates asserts there is a 75-foot setback requirement for the project, the RFP states a minimum setback of 50-feet is required, which is the same requirement outlined in the senior overlay bylaw.

Cohasset Associates asserts its proposal was superior to Deer Hill's due to the fact that it had a higher bid price — Deer Hill bid $4.9 million to build 56 units of housing and Cohasset Associates bid $5.15 million to build 65 units. However, the RFP states, "While the financial aspects of a proposal are very important to the selection of a developer, the town will consider all selection criteria and is not obligated to select the 'highest bidder' if another proposal better satisfies the selection criteria and other requirements of this RFP as a whole."



In addition, Cohasset Associates feels its bid was superior due to the fact that it proposed a 90-foot setback, while Deer Hill had a 50-foot setback. The company also feels that because Deer Hill proposed one main building for its apartments, which is fairly large in scale, its apartments have a better design and blend in more easily with the landscape as they are spread throughout two buildings, each with a maximum size of 25,000 square feet.

The RFP states designs, "Should be sensitive to the topography of the site."

Cohasset Associates feels by choosing Deer Hill Partners, the selectmen have clearly violated Chapter 30B and have not made a decision that is in the best interest of the town.

"Cohasset Associates, Inc., wishes to further advise that in the event the selectmen definitively designate Deer Hill Partners, LLC as developer, and Cohasset Associates, Inc., thereafter prevails (with the Inspector General) on its bid protest, that it will seek damages, not only for the costs for its proposal, but the profit it would have received had the bid been awarded fairly and consistent with the RFP."

However, the town may be protected by wording in the RFP which states, "The town reserves the right to reject any and all proposals and to waive any informality or non-conformity with the submission request if it is deemed in the best interest of the town."

Officer warranted during Beechwood construction

Police, fire chiefs want detail presence

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Police, fire and town officials want more than signage to handle traffic during Greenbush construction.

Beechwood Street will be closed to through traffic for roughly one month. Some think in light of the changes, a police detail officer is warranted in the area, at least near the road's Rte 3A intersection.

In a letter to Jim Eng, director of construction for the MBTA, Greenbush liaison Tom Gruber stated he, along with the chiefs for both the police and fire departments, recommend an officer and cruiser be made available to handle the traffic flow and safety issues during Greenbush-related closures. That includes not only the intersection of Beechwood Street and Rte. 3A but Pond Street and Rte. 3A, when Pond Street is closed due to train work.

Gruber stated he attended a meeting with representatives from Cashman Balfour Beatty, which is constructing the new rail line, and both the chiefs stated at that meeting they feel an officer is warranted at the intersection of Rte. 3A at both streets, due to the high volume of traffic that passes through. Both roads are considered major thoroughfares in town. While it was noted Scituate did not receive traffic assistance for road closures, Gruber wrote, "Cohasset is entirely different."

"Scituate has almost no commercial activity on Route 3A, with very widely spaced intersections. Cohasset abounds with major shopping centers and other retail shops all along Route 3A. Cohasset has only two signalized crossings on Route 3A, at Beechwood and Pond Street. Each of these is to be closed in its turn, off loading all of its traffic onto the other.

"With no police support, this is a disaster waiting to happen. In fact, the Beechwood intersection is already the most accident prone intersection in town, with at least two deaths having occurred there in the recent past," Gruber wrote.

A letter from police chief James Hussey was attached to Gruber's letter, which states his public safety concerns regarding the traffic impact of the closures. He noted the closures will have a tremendous impact at both intersections during peak commuter hours as well as the start and end of the school day, especially since the middle-high school is located on Pond Street.

"Fire Chief Roger Lincoln and I are concerned with the traffic impact these closures will have on our response to emergencies. I recommend that the MBTA be required to have a police detail officer, with a police vehicle, from 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. and 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. Monday-Friday, during the street closures," Hussey's letter states.

At the time the Mariner went to press, the town was still waiting to hear back from the MBTA.

Crews have begun construction on the Beechwood Street grade crossing, which means motorists will need to seek alternate routes to reach Rte 3A from South Main Street and visa versa. There should not be any major construction taking place in North Scituate during the Beechwood Street closing, which makes it a viable alternate means of accessing Rte. 3A, as is Pond Street.

During the closure, the MBTA will be building the railroad bed, laying the infrastructure for the gates, and putting the rails in. Median barriers for the crossing will depend on the driveway configuration to be determined for the condominiums at 39 Beechwood St.

Following the Beechwood Street crossing work, construction will begin on the intersection of Spring and Pond streets. The two projects will not overlap, as there will be road closures for the Pond/ Spring intersection as well.

For more information, please contact Greenbush liaisons Tom Gruber at cgbaffairs@townofcohasset.org or Mark Brennan at cgbengineering@townofcohasset.org or by phone at (781) 383-3094.

Special Town Meeting in the works for late fall

Budget, Cook are likely topics

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

It is the norm for Cohasset to hold a Special Town Meeting every fall. This year, it will likely be held in early December, to give the town ample time to balance the fiscal 2006 budget before the tax rate is set Dec. 15.

Two very different votes were taken on the budget this spring — one at the April 2 Annual Town Meeting and a second at the May 21 special election.

While the budget passed at Town Meeting included the $400,000 operating budget override — which was to be used primarily for the schools — it was voted down at the polls, which means the town will need to vote this fall on a new balanced budget which does not include the $400,000 figure.

The town voted to approve a total operating budget of $31,886,824, with the school's portion totaling $12,629,382, including the $400,000 override.

Overrides - which allow municipalities to raise their taxes above the limit set by Prop. 2-1/2 - are a two-step process. It's not uncommon for Town Meeting, which draws a smaller percentage of voters, to endorse and override that is later rejected at the ballot box.

The budget passed at Town Meeting by a majority vote and 468 residents were in attendance. Town Clerk Marion Douglas said 1,976 voters turned out for the special election — roughly 40 percent of the town's 5,149 registered voters.

In addition, there is the chance there will be an article on the Town Meeting warrant which deals with the Cook Estate. Town Manager Bill Griffin said he would need to speak with selectmen before deciding a course of action, and would not speculate on the direction of the project. However, at previous meetings it has been mentioned that the town might need to purchase the Cook property outright from the heirs of the estate.

The town only has until Sept. 15 to have all permits in place and close on the Sohier Street property with the Cook Estate trustees. Being only three weeks away, that is not likely to happen. The town has the option of paying for up to three, one-month extensions, at $20,000 each. The monthly fees will go toward the purchase price of the land. But if the deal falls through, the town will not make up any of the money spent on extensions.

Town Meeting would need to vote to approve borrowing the money and it would also have to vote to approve purchasing the property outright from the Cook heirs, which is another alternative that has been floated. The town is currently working out a deal where it will purchase the property from the Cook heirs for $4.5 million, then turn around the same day and sell it for $4.9 million to private developer Deer Hill Partners, which the town has been working with to build senior housing on the property.

The Cook heirs have said the town cannot have any more extensions for the project, which means if Deer Hill Partners does not have all necessary permits in hand and is not ready to close the deal with the town by the Sept. 15 deadline, the town may have to purchase the property outright from the Cooks to ensure the deal can move forward. The town would be risking spending the money on the project, as there is no guarantee it can move forward without permits in hand.

Griffin said he is currently searching for a date to hold this year's Special Town Meeting, which will work for those who must attend, including new Town Moderator Dan Evans. Griffin said Town Meeting will be on the agenda for this Tuesday's (Sept. 6) selectmen's meeting, which begins at 7 p.m. in the selectmen's meeting room in Town Hall. The meeting will also be televised.

Italian feast serves up a taste of the old country

All-day event is this Sunday

By Ove Pugh Wilche
CORRESPONDENT

Although it is an outdoor event and open to the public, it may be the best kept secret in our town. There are two reasons for this. First, the neighbors have never complained about the noise because they all participate in the event. Second, it is only advertised by word of mouth. So, what most likely is the biggest annual event in Hingham takes place almost undetected by the locals.

The event is the annual celebration of La Madonna della Luce (Mary of Light). It takes place on the Sunday before Labor Day, this year Sept. 4, at the chapel on Oak Street in North Hingham and is an all day event. The celebration begins with a procession that starts from the intersection of Hull Street (Rte. 228) and Pine Street at 10 a.m. When the procession has reached the chapel, the feast continues with the mass, followed by a picnic lunch where each family brings its own food. Throughout the afternoon families reunite and there are different activities for the children. In the early evening there is family entertainment, and late at night there is an opportunity for the adults to dance to the music of an Italian band.

The first celebration here in Hingham of La Madonna della Luce was held about 1927. Then there were only a few who attended and it was held at a private home in South Hingham, but over the years what is also known as the Italian Feast has grown bigger and today approximately 2,000 people come to the feast that is now held in North Hingham on a tract of land dedicated to this purpose. Most of the participants are Italian-Americans with a connection to Palermiti, a small town in southern Italy where the original Madonna was found in a cave.

There is no doubt that the Italian feast is a family event. All generations are present, but what is striking is that Italian is the predominant language on this day. The explanation is that the Italian-American community tries to maintain its heritage, culture and traditions, and the philosophy is that there is no point in teaching the children the traditions if they don't speak the language. Therefore, one sees a surprisingly high number of even small children who are bilingual.

Another equally astonishing thing is to find a tract of land dedicated to the Feast. Originally the lot was owned by Frank Barbuto, a local developer, who sold the land for the purpose of celebrating La Madonna della Luce. This means that the land can only be used for this purpose and, to make development even more unlikely, it is the church in Palermiti, Italy that owns the land today and holds the power to decide on its future use.

The first celebration in Hingham of La Madonna della Luce was held about 1927.

Nevertheless, there have been some changes, but only to benefit the feast. A platform in front of the small chapel makes it possible to conduct the mass. A small humble building serves in daily life as a storage facility, but turns into a bar with public restrooms during the feast. Finally, a concrete floor in front of a stage makes it possible for the celebrators to dance to the music of the band. Besides these facilities one finds beautiful rock gardens spread over the land and tall trees to provide shade and shelter during the luncheon.

It is a work in the making, and the committee that arranges the feast volunteers endless hours each year to make improvements. This year is no exception. A few trees have been cut down, brush has been cleared off the grounds, the electrical wiring has undergone maintenance, and rewiring has been done as needed. In addition, the rock gardens have been replanted with beautiful flowers. Besides all this, the area is now being cleaned up so it will appear nice and neat for the feast.

About the work needed to maintain the area, committee members said many volunteers have worked tremendously hard to make this dream come true, and they want to thank them all, but no names mentioned so as to not forget anyone. However, the Mary of Light committee and the people of Palermiti officially want to express a special thanks to Joseph Donahue, owner of Microtech Staffing Group and his family, who generously donate money to the church every year so this event can take place.

Besides the improvements to the property, the committee has expanded the activities over the years. Again this year there will be various rides that can keep the smaller children occupied throughout the afternoon. Also again, as in the past two years, the feast will have its own grill master offering barbecued Italian sausages with roast peppers and onions, since most families bring only enough food for lunch and have nothing to eat for dinner. As a children's activity, it will be possible to roast marshmallows on the grill.

However, visitors who have been to the feast in previous years will find that certain things remain the same. Again this year, the Roma Band of the North End of Boston will be the marching band in the procession, will play during the mass, and will entertain with merry Italian tunes while the picnic lunch is on. Although the Sacred Heart Church in Boston has been closed due to the reorganization of the Catholic Church and he has relocated to Providence, Rhode Island, Padre Vincenzo will conduct the mass as in previous years. The raffle will, as always, take place in the late afternoon. At the moment of this writing, it is unknown what prizes will be offered, but the committee confirms that there will be everything from T-shirts to TV sets, stereo equipment, and cameras.

All in all, anyone from Hingham who wants to relax, have fun, get a taste of Italy, or just forget the world and all its trouble for a couple of hours should attend the Italian Feast that is a festive, but casual event. It is a feast, but also a party. Most of all and above everything it is a family get-together and the committee has issued an open invitation.

Again this year the Roma Band from Boston's North End will entertain young and old alike during Sunday's Italian feast. The band plays during the procession, supplies music for the mass, and Italian tunes during the picnic lunch.

Business as usual?

South Shore League could come down to the same football powers

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Cohasset, Norwell, Abington.

In one order or another, that has been the hierarchy of the South Shore League in recent memory. Only Carver in 2000 has broken through that powerful trio within the last six years.

Lately, it has been the Skippers who have dominated, having won the league three of the last four years. In 2002, it was Abington taking home the title during their magical Super Bowl season.

Coaches, as expected, are saying the league will be wide open and more competitive this season. But one gets the feeling it will again come down to the Skippers, Clippers and Green Wave.

"I think the league is pretty balanced," said Cohasset head coach Tony Rolfe. "You never know in our league. It only takes one or two kids to make a difference.

"Of course, you can never count out Norwell and Abington."

Or the defending champions, who will be strong again thanks in large part (no pun intended) to their powerful offensive line. That also should be a point of strength for Norwell and Abington.

If there is to be a spoiler, the best bet is Hull. Carver has talent at the skill positions, while Mashpee is likely a year or two away from being a force.

Here is a look at Marinerland's three teams in the South Shore League, as well as brief glances at the league's other three programs.

Cohasset

The two-time defending league champions are out to prove this year that they can win in the postseason.

Of course, in order to do that, they will have to win the league for the third straight season. If that is going to happen, it will be the offensive line that will lead the way.

The Skippers return four starters from a group that was the best in the league last year. The best of the bunch is senior co-captain Nick Arment, a 6-foot-2 280-pounder who is very athletic for a kid his size. He is being recruited by several Div. I colleges.

Among the other top returnees up front are sophomore Jake Cuneo (6-2, 265) and junior Justin Alexander (6-3, 245), certainly no slouches in their own right.

"Size is not a problem with our line, and for a young group, they have a great deal of experience," says Cohasset head coach Tony Rolfe. "We bring them along very quickly."

Rolfe isn't kidding; last year's Div. 3 semifinal against Westwood saw Cohasset start three sophomores and a freshman on the line with Matt Casey, the center and only graduation loss on the line. Arment was injured for the game.

The defense suffered some key losses from last year - including dominant defensive end Kelvin Ferreira - but Rolfe believes there is enough returning talent to make this a strong bunch again this season.

Cohasset has one of the area's more highly regarded defensive backs in junior Jeff Brown, who will be joined in the backfield by senior co-captain David McKenna. Rolfe calls McKenna "one of our best players."

Senior Scott Wakefield returns to the defensive line, and among the top linebackers playing right behind him will be junior Colin Conway and senior co-captain Dan McCarthy. McCarthy will also play tight end to give Cohasset yet another big, strong blocker for the running game.

The biggest question mark for Cohasset will be their starting backfield. Quarterback Crandon Leahy, fullback Teddie Straughn and halfback Joe Durkin (over 1,500 yards last season) have all graduated from last year's club.

Junior Anthony DiPaolo is set to take over at quarterback, with sophomore P.J. McCaw to see the bulk of the time at fullback. Senior Shane Dorian and sophomore Kyle Pinkus will both get their share of carries at the halfback position.

For Rolfe, the recipe for success is pretty simple.

"The biggest thing with us is that we can't afford to lose anybody," he said. "After that, we're going to rely on our offensive line to keep the offense moving."

And the hope for the Skippers

The end of a run

After 15 years in the sport, Nancy Durkin ends a notable gymnastics career

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

For about as long as she can remember, Nancy Durkin has been doing gymnastics.

She estimates she was three years old when she first started. Now a high school graduate and freshman at Stonehill College, that equals over 80 percent of her life that she has been involved in the sport.

The accolades, particularly at the high school level, were plenty. Competing for the Cohasset-Norwell co-op team, Durkin was a three-time league All-Star and three-time Mariner All-Scholastic.

Now, as the next phase of her life has begun, another one ends. Stonehill does not have a gymnastics team; Durkin's competitive days in the sport are over.

She probably could have continued competing at the college level, but Durkin says the Easton school was the best fit for her. She is going in undecided on a major, but says she will likely study something in the business realm.

And as for giving up the sport...

"I didn't mind it at first," Durkin said in an interview just a few days before she moved in to college. "Now, I kind of want to start doing it again."

Durkin ended her high school gymnastics career on a high note in her senior season. She was again the team's top all-around performer, and set a career high score of 34.25.

The recent CHS grad says competition has always brought the best out of her.

"I'm kind of a wimp to try things at first, but in competition I'd do it without a problem," Durkin said. "If you're scared, it's hard to go far."

After playing field hockey in middle school, Durkin decided to focus on just one sport at the high school level.

"It's hard to do gymnastics and other sports at the same time," she said. "This is so demanding; I just stuck with gymnastics."

The most difficult event for Durkin to master was the beam, which sees the most falls and injuries of any event in the sport. After some dubious performances on the beam her freshman year, Durkin developed to the point where she was a league All-Star on the event this season, a feat that took a strong mindset more than anything else.

"It's nerve-wracking," Durkin said. "You're all shaky on a beam that's just four inches wide. Some people fall off once and it throws off their entire routine."

The improvement can be attributed to Durkin's determination and unwillingness to give up, says Ruthann Ardizzoni, director of gymnastics at the South Shore Community Center in Cohasset.

"Nancy could get past three falls and go on," Ardizzoni said. "You can always look up to a gymnast who can do that."

Durkin practiced at the center since she was a young child, and Ardizzoni has known her every step of the way. Durkin has spent the last few summers teaching kids gymnastics at the center, and has also done so at the Derby Summer Arts Program in Hingham.

Ardizzoni says she has seen Durkin change a lot as a teacher and as a person over the last several years.

Then... Even as a 9-year-old, Nancy Durkin was unafraid to hop on the balance beam and practice her craft.

Now... After a very successful high school gymnastics career, Durkin has competed in the sport for the last time. She is now a freshman at Stonehill College.

Lady Crusaders are regional champions

The U-15 Lady Crusaders are the USL Northeast region champions.

The team wrapped up their season with a 14-3-1 record, and will be heading to Tampa in November to play in the USL nationals. Most of the girls on the team recently returned from training in England with professional clubs.

In addition to winning the northeast region, the Crusaders set the record for least goals scored against in a season.

The team features athletes mostly from the South Shore and a few girls from Rhode Island.

The Skippers will need to find a way to replace Joe Durkin's 1,600+ yards from 2004. Senior Shane Dorian and sophomore Kyle Pinkus will be getting the bulk of the carries this season.

Business as usual?

is that they will finally move past that playoff hurdle and play in the Div. 3 Super Bowl. As bad as the players want it, Rolfe may want it the most; he will be retiring in June after 34 years of teaching and coaching. Rest assured he will want to go out on top.

Coaches, as expected, are saying the league will be wide open and more competitive this season. But one gets the feeling it will again come down to the Skippers, Clippers and Green Wave.

Norwell

Like their rivals in Cohasset, the Clippers have a trend coming into this season they would like to change.

After winning the league title in 1999, Norwell has been runners-up each of the last five seasons.

If that is to change, veteran head coach Jim Sullivan is also relying heavily on his offensive line. That is nothing new for Sullivan, as the Clippers have long been one of the league's top rushing teams.

Sullivan is counting on four-year starter Christian Comeau to anchor his team in the trenches on both sides of the ball. The 6-foot-1, 250-pound Comeau is a two-time league All-Star.

The other returning starters up front are senior tackle Ted Kleber and senior tight end Billy Arria.

"Other than those three, we're going to have some young guys stepping up in that position," Sullivan said. "Hopefully, they can get some quick experience."

That group will be blocking for an entirely new backfield. Quarterback Myles Clancy, fullback Brian Ware and halfback Greg Thornton (a 2,000-yard rusher last year) have all graduated. Norwell's preseason practices have seen some stern competition to fill those spots.

Senior Scott Chappell and junior Ryan Kane are in the hunt for the signal-calling position. Sullivan said Monday Chappell has "a bit of an edge" at this point. There is also a lot of competition at the fullback spot, with seniors Josh Scott and Kyle Laffin among those angling for playing time.

Halfback will be the key position, and seniors Steve Farinick and Dan Pye are atop the depth chart. Sullivan believes both will play a big part in Norwell's offense.

"Our backfield is very talented," he said. "They've been waiting their turn, just as Thornton did last year."

Split end Jake Corcoran will lead the wide receiver corps for the Clippers.

Defensively, Norwell will be strong up front with the likes of Comeau, Arria, end Brian Donoghue and tackle Mike Rapa. Donohue, a junior, may be the best of the bunch.

Steve Farinick (defensive back) and younger brother Doug (inside linebacker) join safety Andrew O'Donnell as the other key returnees on defense. That leaves a few more spots for players from last year's JV team that lost only twice.

With a majority of last year's league All-Stars having graduating, Sullivan says new faces could determine the league race in '05.

"This year, there are going to be a lot of younger guys that will make their mark," he said.

Abington

After a year in which Abington only won two games in the South Shore League (2-3, 6-5 overall), coach Jim Kelliher and the Green Wave are eager to improve on that this season. While citing Norwell and Cohasset as the front runners in the race for the SSL title, Kelliher said counting his team out wouldn't be wise.

"Everyone has players back and I'd like to think we'd be in the mix," he said. "I think it's all going to come down to those last few South Shore League games."

One of Abington's greatest strengths will be its game experience at a number of positions, particularly in the running game and at quarterback. Sophomore Tim Wells returns to lead the offense after a year in which he made plenty of Waves and earned South Shore League All-star status. Seniors Steve Golbranson and Sean Whitman, and junior Joseph Gabriele come back to pace Abington's ground game.

Junior Matthew MacLean will be the big leader on the line, alongside juniors Jeremy Brandon, Keith Earner, and Ronald Dunn. Junior John Creamer and senior Brandon Doherty return to the linebacker core.

"Not all these kids were starters, but they all got in games and have spent a good amount of time on the field," said Kelliher. "Having that game experience will really make a difference."

Lack of depth will be a potential weakness for the Green Wave, according to Kelliher, as he will have to rely on a lot of untested youngster to fill any gaps at positions.

"We want to get as many kids in as possible because it will be a long season for the starters, but we don't have a lot of depth at positions," he said. "There should be four of five games this season where we'll be able to get some kids in."

What do other teams in the South Shore League have?

"Norwell has probably the best crop of athletes returning," said Kelliher. "Cohasset has the bulk of their defense back, but will need to replace some guys offensively.

"If things work out the way we expect them too, we should be right there in the mix."

Teams outside Marinerland:

Hull was a tough team last year, having beaten Abington on the road (21-14) and hung tough in losses to Norwell (22-15) and Cohasset (20-6) on Thanksgiving. The Pirates return star running back Bill Alexander, whom rival coaches agree is one of the best in the league at that position. Another factor in Hull's favor this season is their schedule: all of their games will be played at home. Hull were road warriors last year during reconstruction of their football field, and they are making up for it this season.

Michael Grant returns for his senior season to lead Carver. The team's leading rusher may be the league's best athlete, as he is also a star sprinter for the Crusaders track teams. Grant's speed was on full display during Carver's 37-6 loss to Norwell last season, in which the Crusaders' only touchdown came on his 96-yard kickoff return. He also ran for a 49-yard score against Cohasset, so there is little wonder why his name pops up immediately when opposing coaches discuss the league's top players. Grant will need more help around him this season, however, as Carver was not very competitive in most of their league games last season.

Sullivan says Mashpee has a "very talented sophomore class." That bodes well for the Falcons in 2007, but what it means for them this year is probably some tough losses. They lost to Cohasset, Norwell and Abington by an average of 19 points last year, and more of the same is likely in store this season.

FROM DURKIN, PAGE 17

"She's come a long way. She's more enthusiastic," Ardizzoni said. "She's obviously come out of her shell. I think that comes from competition.

"She can teach classes without much direction from me."

In terms of practicing to keep one's skills at a high level, gymnastics is one of the more demanding sports. Durkin says she would generally practice for a couple hours at least three days a week, sometimes as many as five or six days.

In the eyes of her mentor, it has been worth it.

"All of her hard work has paid off," Ardizzoni said. "She is blessed with a lot of raw talent that many kids wish they had, and she has made the most of it.

"It takes years of hard work, dedication and love of the sport to become the gymnast that some kids turn out to be."

Interested in sports writing?

Are you a high school or college student in town with an interest in covering local sports for the hometown newspaper?

The Mariner wants to hear from you.

We have several opportunities this upcoming sports season to cover games and write stories about the high school teams, as well as youth and recreational sports in town. This is a great way for those interested in exploring a career in journalism to get some experience and clips, or for someone who just likes sports to take their interest to a different level.

Those interested should be prepared to write one story per week and be able to adhere to weekly deadlines. If you are interested, contact sports editor Mark Goodman at (781)837-4577, or via email at mgoodman@cnc.com.

Fluency Factory kindergarten program

The Fluency Factory, a learning center located in downtown Hingham is announcing group services for kindergarten children. Richard McManus, Director of The Fluency Factory discussed the experiences, which have led the center to begin this program. "There are still all too many children who are unprepared for reading at the end of kindergarten. We see some of these children for one-to-one tutoring, and have been able to help them to attain excellent readings skills. However many of these children have had sufficient difficulty so their confidence is damaged. By starting them as kindergartners we can help them keep their confidence intact as they build their skills."

"Phonics works—for every child—and we can assure that children are fully prepared to read," said Rachel Currie-Rubin. Currie-Rubin went on: "We will work with small groups of kindergartners to supplement the education they are receiving in school.".

Each group will be tailored to the children's individual levels, and multiple tutors will be on hand to work with each child. Enrollment will be limited—details are available on the Fluency Factory web site at www.fluencyfactory.com. For more information, call the Fluency Factory at 781- 749-7400.

Ghost stories needed

The Cohasset Historical Society is planning its Fall Lecture Series. The theme for the October program is ghost stories of the South Shore. Anyone with knowledge of the spirits that haunt the area is asked to contact the Historical Society and share their stories. The programs are held on the third Wednesday of each month, Sept. through Nov. at 7:30 p.m. in the Pratt Building at 106 South Main St.

Contact the Society at 781-383-1434 for additional information and to volunteer your ghost stories.

Author to share political anecdotes

Buttonwood Books & Toys hosts Cohasset author Lincoln Palmer Bloomfield, who will discuss "Accidental Encounters With History; and Some Lessons Learned" on Thursday, Sept. 15, 7 p.m., at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Shaw's Plaza, Cohasset. The presentation includes a question and answer period followed by a book signing.

According to the Hot House Press, "Lincoln Palmer Bloomfield's Accidental Encounters with History are exactly that: candid, witty, and often anecdotal observations of the national and political scene, drawing on his extraordinary academic and diplomatic career during the past half-century. Bloomfield's lively 'encounters' are first-hand experiences in the State Department, as a white house staff member, a professor at MIT, and being on the lecture platform in 35 countries…The author's wit, combined with knowledge, result in a truly enjoyable read."

Author and co-author of 11 books on foreign affairs Bloomfield graduated from Harvard, where he also received a doctorate degree. He served in the U.S. Navy, the State Department and as director of global issues for the National Security Council. As a political science professor at MIT, he directed its arms control project and pioneered the development of political gaming.

Climbing the career ladder

Training program gives employees a chance to grow

By Charlie Breitrose
DAILY NEWS STAFF

A group of nursing homes has teamed up with Employment Options of Marlborough to provide a training program for their employees to move up the career ladder.

Workers can take free classes to prepare them to enter a nursing program, or improve their English skills, if that is what is needed, said Shannon Hall, who coordinates the program for Employment Options, a nonprofit group in Marlborough that provides job training and career counseling for people with low incomes or mental health issues.

"The hope is the classes encourage them to go back to school to become nurses," Hall said. "Typically (these employees) are either in housekeeping or nurse's aides with very little skills, basically taking care of patients."

The group teamed up with Medway Country Manor and the Beaumont Rehabilitation and Skilled Nursing Centers, which has facilities in Northbridge, Natick, Westborough and Northborough.

John Peters III, administrator of Medway Country Manor, said the program is a great way for people to improve their skills and salaries.

"It gives people a way to move up," Peters said. "Historically, people were locked into a position, but this is a way to give them a way to advance."

At Medway Manor 24 employees took part in the program, which is known as Advanced Career Enrichment at the home. There are three different classes to take, Peters said.

Employees who come from outside the United States can take English as a second language courses.

"A lot of people have gone through the ESL classes," Peters said. "Now they have much better language skills, they are more confident about themselves and they just communicate much better."

Another option is the certified nurse's assistant career ladder, where workers can become CNAs or move up to more advanced levels of CNA.

The third program is known as bridge to nursing, Peters said. Students cannot take the nursing classes at the nursing home, but they can get the ball rolling there. The classes help workers brush up on academic classes such as algebra and anatomy to prepare them to enter a nursing program.

"The bridge to nursing program is for people looking forward to becoming a (licensed practical nurse) or a (registered nurse)," Peters said. "It helps them prepare for the placement test. They need to have proficiency in algebra, or writing or whatever."

Instructors from Quinsigamond Community College in Worcester come in to teach the ESL classes and the bridge to nursing program. The CNA career ladder course includes 13 classes, each on a different topic. Some are taught by Quinsigamond instructors, Peters said, those covering life skills are run by Employment Options. Outside instructors also come in to teach.

Employment Options was founded 20 years ago to help people with mental illnesses and those with low-incomes or unemployment. The joint venture with the nursing homes began last year in an effort to broaden the group's reach, said Toni Wolfe, executive director of Employment Options.

The Commonwealth Corporation, a Boston-based organization that promotes job training and creation, provided money for the program, which is in the 18th of 26 months of funding.

Because the people targeted for the program lead busy lives, often working more than one job and raising families, Wolfe wanted to make classes easy to attend.

"We need to go to them, go where they are working," Wolfe said.

The program helps workers, and fills positions in high demand, Hall said.

"With support services available to them they can go back to school, so three or four years down the road (they) can be making 40 percent more," Hall said. "At the same time it helps meet the need for licensed nurses."

Peters said the partnership came about by chance. He was interested in starting a training program, and attended an information session in Marlborough.

"When I was there, somebody introduced me to Shannon from Employment Options," Peters said. "Working with them is great. They help with grant administration. If I had to deal with that, I'm not sure could do it. I have to run a facility, too."

The homes that take part in the program will benefit, Wolfe said.

"They know if they support the employees there will be less turnover and more loyalty," Wolfe said.

Those in the program have the ability, Hall said, but sometimes they just need the extra nudge.

"Life gets in the way," Hall said. "Many people are low-skill workers, low income, many of whom work two jobs. It's difficult for them to realize if they give up $30 a week now, a year from now they will make $150 more a month working one job."

The program does not have money to pay for things like child care, Hall said, but they will try to find a solution.

"If they can't afford day care, get creative with people," Hall said. "We weren't able to give resources, but we problem solve – is there someone from your church who can babysit, or friends?"

Peters said the partnership has already produced results.

"We're only halfway through the program," Peters said. "We have had one CNA career ladder class, and the second round will start this fall.

"We had a bunch of CNAs go through the career ladder, and now they have more responsibilities and an increase in wages."

Take that next step

Workers are exploring new careers, getting advanced degrees

By Jennifer Justus
BOSTON HERALD

For Steven Gallien, 39, of Ashburnham, a broken washing machine helped launch a career. But without help from a local college, he might not have thought outside his suds-filled box.

Rather than call a repairman when his washing machine went kaput, Gallien, who was employed in a factory making corrugated boxes, vowed to fix it himself. Although he had no experience in repair, he discovered he had a knack for it. He called Bay State School of Technology, where he had learned about appliance repair courses from an ad. After 10 months working during the day and attending classes at night, he said he traded a dead-end factory job for a burgeoning career mending luxury kitchen appliances.

Gallien is among a legion of workers who are assessing their talents and making creative choices in a competitive marketplace to start a new career, prepare for a transition or polish skills for a promotion. Though Bay State School of Technology helped Gallien hone his raw knack for a new field, other schools offer accelerated master's degrees or noncredit development courses for professionals who want to sharpen their skills for change in the workplace.

Although employees' career paths may be different, their goals are the same: Be creative and grow professionally to stay ahead of the competition.

"I had worked at a company for 19 years," Gallien said. "There was very little opportunity to get ahead. About a year ago, I decided to better myself. It was the best decision I could have made."

While computer repair has been a trendy career choice in the past, programs in more obscure trades such as appliance repair are growing in popularity for career-changers in their mid- to late-30s, according to Brian Murphy, director of development at Bay State School of Technology.

"The program that's really flying now is air conditioning and refrigeration tech," Murphy said.

Similar to Gallien, Celeste Kantarges, 29, of Dedham, also has been working days and attending school evenings to step up her career. A personnel administrator at Amego Inc. in Mansfield, Kantarges handles recruiting, hiring and employee benefits while working toward an accelerated master's degree in human resources management at Emmanuel College.

Galen Williams works on a central air conditioning unit at the Bay State School of Technology.

"I feel like a master's is the next bachelor's degree," she said. "I think that's why people are getting them – to get one step ahead."

Emmanuel College enrollment counselor Helen Muterperl agrees. "New England is so rich in higher education, in order to advance in many fields, you need your master's," she said.

The accelerated degree programs at Emmanuel College are designed for adult professionals who have limited time but want to make progress quickly in their careers. Each course in the 12-course program is only seven weeks long and meets one night a week for four hours.

"People choose the accelerated program because it's hard for them to go back to a traditional mode," Muterperl said.

In addition to human resources management, Emmanuel College offers accelerated master's programs in education and management.

Lesley University also has been adding courses to a 2-year-old continuing education program where professionals can get a leg up in noncredit courses without having to commit to a full program.

"We're getting a reputation for our continuing education division because the bigger universities only want (students) for credit," said Joyce Wadlington, director of continuing education at Lesley University.

Most students, she says, are adult learners or professionals choosing creative topics such as "Women, Power and Leadership," a course for female managers interested in advancing their careers, and "Nonprofit Leadership," a course for professionals considering a career transition to nonprofit or a post on a nonprofit board.

Wadlington said one of the most popular professional development choices, however, gives advice about self-assessment and transition rather than specific instruction in a field. In "Career Exploration and Decision Making" students learn how to recognize their skills and use them to get ahead in their current careers or prepare them change.

"We give it every semester," she said. "And we fill it every semester."

Public health: A great way to make a difference

By Dr. Elaine J. Alpert
DAILY NEWS CORRESPONDENT

Health care today offers a world of opportunities, especially in Massachusetts where it's one of the region's major industries. And within the industry, many jobs offer rewarding careers. If you have a creative, inquiring mind, seek challenges, care about people and communities, and want to make a difference, think about the field of public health.

Public health is a broad area of medicine distinguished by two factors: first, it focuses on the health and safety of populations (cultures, communities, societies) rather than individuals and, second, it stresses the importance of finding the root cause of health problems, with an eye on prevention.

Perhaps no other area of health care has as widespread a reach – or impact – as public health. Public health professionals work on global, national and local levels, and deal with multiple issues: infectious diseases like flu and rabies, water and air pollution, toxic waste disposal, nutrition, smoking, domestic violence, hunger, obesity, exercise, sexually transmitted diseases and much more. And new public health challenges arise often.

Public health people "connect the dots" in identifying a problem, pinpointing its cause and then working to prevent it from recurring by designing and instituting prevention programs that benefit everyone.

At times it's difficult to find enough money and resources to produce good public health programs, but the demand for a quality public health workforce has never been higher. Positions in the field include physicians, nurses, statisticians, program coordinators, administrators and health educators. The actual work of public health can be anything from analyzing statistics and cases, to working in a laboratory testing air or water for pollutants, to community outreach on drug abuse prevention, homelessness, domestic violence, or hunger – and much more.

A good way to start your transition into public health is to apply the skills you now have in your current job. If you work in an advertising agency, for example, can you raise awareness of public health issues by creating public service announcements that can be used by local public health officials, nonprofit agencies, or media? If you're in the food industry, what creative approaches can you develop to help fight hunger? If you're in education, can you bring public health messages to schoolchildren, teachers and administrators, to help them live healthier safer lives? Such approaches are limited only by your imagination.

Volunteering also offers opportunities and can lead to part- or full-time positions. Massachusetts has thousands of nonprofit agencies performing valuable services of all kinds that need volunteers, especially those with a passion to help people in need and make their communities better places. Many agencies even offer training programs at no cost.

To enhance your transition, think about taking courses in health care. Local colleges and adult education centers are good places to investigate, and your family physician may be able to help. Visit the Web sites of the World Health Organization (www.who.int), U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (www.cdc.gov) and the Massachusetts Department of Public Health (www.mass.gov/dph/) for a closer look at the field (especially the CDC's public health training section).

While it may not be possible for everyone to attend medical school or pursue a master's degree in public health, those who want to make a difference in their community will find opportunity, as well as satisfaction, in working to improve the public health of our communities and citizens.

Elaine J. Alpert, M.D., M.P.H. is associate professor of public health and medicine at Boston University School of Public Health and a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society's Committee on Violence.

The devil went down to Plymouth

Charlie Daniels plays Memorial Hall Sept. 2

Like the State of Texas, Charlie Daniels is partly Western and partly Southern. His signature "bullrider" hat and belt buckle, his love of horses, cowboy lore and the heroes of championship rodeo, Western movies, and Louis L'Amour novels, identify him as a Westerner. The son of a lumberjack and a Southerner by birth, his music — rock, country, bluegrass, blues, gospel — is quintessentially Southern

"Few individuals have symbolized the South in popular culture as directly and indelibly as Charlie Daniels."

-- Encyclopedia of Southern Culture

"I used to say, 'I'm not an outlaw; I'm an outcast,'" says the Grammy Award winning star. "When it gets right down to the nitty gritty, I've just tried to be who I am. I've never followed trends or fads. I couldn't even if I tried. I can't be them; I can't be anybody but me."

Charlie Daniels will definitely be himself when he makes his Plymouth Memorial Hall debut on Friday, Sept. 2 at 7:30 p.m. For decades, he has steadfastly refused to label his music as anything other than "CDB music," music that is now sung around the fire at 4-H Club and scout camps, helped elect an American President, and been popularized on a variety of radio formats.

Charlie Daniels

When you hear a classic Charlie Daniels Band performance like "The Devil Went Down to Georgia," you hear music that knows no clear genre. Is it a folk tale? A southern boogie? A country fiddle tune? An electric rock anthem? The answer is "yes" to all of that and more. And the same goes for "In America," "Uneasy Rider," "The South's Gonna Do It," "Long Haired Country Boy," "Still in Saigon," "The Legend of Wooley Swamp," and the rest of a catalog that spans more than 35 years of record making and represents more than 18 million in sales.

In a night that is sure to be rockin', The Charlie Daniels Band will be bringing all their hits to Plymouth. Opening for The Charlie Daniels Band will be Chad Burdick. Tickets priced at $38 & $48 are on sale at the Plymouth memorial Hall box-office at 50 Court Street in Plymouth, online at www.plymouthhall .com, by phone at 866-468-7619 & 508-747-1340, and through all Strawberries outlets.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

ALL IN THE TIMING

While an explosive noise can result in immediate hearing loss, it is the chronic din of daily life that is responsible for deteriorated hearing over time. The conventional wisdom of assessing the risk of hearing loss is the intensity of the noise (measured in decibels), multiplied by the duration (the time of exposure). The danger begins at about 85 decibels, which is approximately the noise that a lawnmower makes. Hence, the louder the noise, the less time you should allow yourself to be exposed to it. Prolonged exposure to any noise that exceeds 85 decibels can cause gradual hearing loss. The so-called "five-decibel rule" says that for each five-decibel increase, the permissible exposure time is cut in half.

You don't have to be a math wizard to figure out when noise levels are too high. Sounds that are so loud that they actually hurt your ears are dangerous to your hearing health. If you suspect your hearing has suffered because of excessive noise, whether from a one-time trauma or a lifetime of accumulated damage, FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER invites you to come see us for a free hearing test. We offer full-spectrum hearing health services, from evaluations to custom fittings of hearing aids to follow-up care. We're located at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Building in Weymouth; we also have an office in Abington. PH: 781-337-1144.

P.S. According to the five-decibel rule, one hour of exposure at 110 decibels is equivalent to eight hours at 95 decibels.

The glamorous life

Teens, parents take classic Miami beach break

By LARRY KATZ

MIAMI -- This is how cool this city is: When I told my two impossible-to-please teenagers we were going there on a family vacation, they actually said, "Great." And smiled.

Score one for Dad.

Quite likely my kids' vision of what Miami held in store was informed by watching MTV spring break specials. But even though our week there did not include hip-hop-fueled beach parties, all-night raves or J.Lo sightings, 16-year-old Samantha and 13-year-old Alex were not disappointed. They both had a blast. So did Cora, their 8-year-old sister. And, I am happy to say, their parents, too. Miami is ripe with pleasures besides ogling the buff bods in bathing suits parading through South Beach.

In search of a classic Miami Beach experience, we bedded down at a classic, Miami Beach's biggest hotel, the Fontainebleau. This fabled '50s landmark, where Frank Sinatra, Sammy Davis Jr. and Dean Martin played and stayed, recently underwent a $400 million renovation for its 50th birthday celebration this year. The endless lobby, the comfortably redecorated rooms and the curving white building itself still evoke the glamour of an era long past, but post-renovation the Fountainbleu feels fashionably modern.

But what impressed my teenagers was the hotel's history. They didn't care -- and why would they? -- that Jackie Gleason based his TV show here and Sean Connery wandered the grounds as Agent 007 in "Goldfinger." What wowed Alex was realizing that this was the joint that earned Al Pacino's nod of approval when he played Tony Montana in "Scarface." And Samantha was giddy with delight when she learned that the characters from "The O.C." -- her favorite TV show -- chose the Fontainebleau as their digs in the show's spring break episode.

Beyond the considerable glitz factor, for many visitors, especially young ones, the best part of the Fontainebleau is its extravagant pools. You easily could pass the day -- or days -- lounging around the expansive main pool, built around a man-made rock formation complete with waterfall.

But kids also will clamor to spend time at Cookie's World, the Fontainebleau's water park.

Ocean Drive's the place to see and be seen in the heat of Miami's night life.

Miami's peaceful, aqua-green waters create a balance with the bustle of the city.

Built under and around the tentacles of a giant octopus -- rest assured, a friendly looking octopus -- are a water slide, river tube ride and shallow pool. The slide and ride do not offer the kind of thrills older teens crave but younger kids will be thoroughly amused. Cookie's World is also where parents looking for a break will find the all-day Kid's Cove program for 5- to 12-year-olds, available for a fee.

Additional aquatic diversion lies a short walk away. Exit the Fontainebleau grounds, cross over the famous Miami Beach wooden boardwalk and you are on the even more famous beach itself. We were slightly stunned to find that beach chairs rent for $10 each, with an umbrella another $10, but that is the going rate along the entire length of Miami Beach. I sat on my towel.

Our children were so content at the Fontainebleau they didn't want to leave. We insisted they see what else the Miami area had to offer. On our first excursion we drove our rental car to the recently relocated Parrot Jungle Island, where you can feed uncaged parrots by hand. The place isn't only for the birds. Entertaining shows featuring snakes, crocodiles, lizards and other creatures take place throughout the day.

If you have enough energy after leaving Parrot Jungle, those with young kids should take the short ride to the other side of the MacArthur Causeway and visit the new Miami Children's Museum, which has so many fun activities your kids won't even notice it's educational, too.

Visiting Monkey Jungle the next day required driving to the most southern outskirts of Miami, but the sheer novelty of the place made it worth the trip. According to the billboards, Monkey Jungle is where "the humans are in cages." The gimmick: you walk along trails enclosed by wire mesh fencing while the monkeys dart around and above you.

Especially above. Drop some packaged monkey food -- raisins, etc. -- into one of the little dishes hanging suspended on a chain and a spider monkey is likely to race over and pull it up to snag the treat. It's more fun than a barrel of -- oh, don't make me say it.

Though we were curious to see the highly regarded "cageless" Miami MetroZoo, we'd had our fill of animal encounters and headed to downtown Miami and the Bayside Marketplace. This indoor/outdoor mall overlooking Biscayne Bay is an exceptionally pleasant place to shop and eat an authentic Cuban sandwich (ham, pork and cheese). We did both before taking a 90-minute Island Queen Cruise around the harbor, the working port of Miami and celebrity-infested Star Island.

The cruise guides, speaking in English and Spanish, happily pointed out the homes of the rich and famous. After watching far too many episodes of MTV's "Cribs," my hard-to-impress teenagers were tickled to view the exteriors of Diddy's and Shaquille O'Neal's opulent pads for themselves.

By the time our stay drew to a close, our family had found its Miami groove. We partook of glamour by association just sitting outdoors at a table at a restaurant on Ocean Drive, the art deco architecture strip of Miami Beach, or by taking an evening stroll around the always humming Lincoln Road pedestrian mall.

The morning we left for the airport we learned the Fontainebleau had been sold to a new owner who plans to extend its brand name to a new resort in Las Vegas, while renovating the just-renovated Miami Beach landmark yet again.

Rates for the Fontainebleau, located at 4441 Collins Ave, Miami Beach, start at $169 per night for a family of four. Resort Activity Package rates start at $225 with a three-night minimum stay and include breakfast coupons, wine and one massage. Cookie's Package rates start at $199 and include breakfast and a half-day session at the Kid's Cove Program. Call 800-491-6864 or go to www.fontainebleauresorts.com

Flood waters are slowly receding in New Orleans, but the devastation Hurricane Katrina left in its wake will never be forgotten. Pictures of the area have flashed continually across television screens for almost two weeks, leaving cities and towns all over the United States wondering how prepared their hometown would be if disaster struck and what they would do.

If disaster ever strikes in Cohasset, there is a comprehensive emergency management plan already in place which outlines procedures and the chain of command.

Emergency management director Arthur Lehr of North Main Street is man in charge if a state-of-emergency is declared for the town — either at the state level by the governor or the local level by the board of selectmen. If a state-of-emergency is not declared, the local police and fire departments would handle the situation.

Start new year without contract

By Samantha Brown

It was a bittersweet first day back at school for Cohasset teachers Tuesday. Although they were excited to begin a new year and get back into their routines, an informational picket slated for day two put a cloud over the festivities.

Wednesday, both before and after school, members of the teachers' union carried picket signs to let the public know they had gone back to work this year without a contract. The picket was only held for one day. While negotiations have been ongoing and will continue, the contract expired Aug. 31.

"This was a very, very difficult decision for the association to make. There were very long discussions. This is a very painful thing for teachers to do, and we wish we didn't have to do it at all," said Patricia McGrail, president of the Cohasset Teachers Association and high school

Cohasset ACO joins relief effort

Cohasset Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy and seven others, who are all part of the Massachusetts emergency animal disaster response team, should have arrived in Louisiana late Wednesday to help with the relief effort.

Murphy, whose duties are shared with the town of Norwell, is part of a strike team under the auspices of the Humane Society of the United States. He and seven other animal control officers from Dennis, Beverly and New Bedford are helping to rescue and care for abandoned and injured animals in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

Murphy said he received a call Monday about being part of the strike team.

"There's a tremendous need," he said Tuesday before heading out. "Up until now the rescue efforts have been dealing with people."

Once in Louisiana, Murphy said he was unsure if he would be reachable by cell phone or telephone.

Murphy, who was loading up the Animal Control van with seven days worth of food and water Tuesday afternoon, planned to meet the other members of the team on Rte. 95 on the other side of Providence a couple of hours later at roughly 4 p.m. The eight animal control officers planned to travel down in four vehicles. With two in each vehicle they could share the estimated 22-hour drive, he said.

The team is staying in Gonzales, La., which is between Baton Rouge and New Orleans.

Murphy said the team, which

"We expected to be in Jackson for three days and head back. That's what we packed for."
— Collette Higginson

When news traveled to New Orleans residents Collette and Steve Higginson that Hurricane Katrina was on its way, they packed their bags, loaded up the car with their three children and the family dog, and headed for Jackson, Miss. Little did they know, the storm they expected to ride out over a long weekend would make it impossible to return home for months.

Hearing of the flood waters which now cover 80 percent of the city they call home, the Higginsons decided to keep on driving. For more than 39 hours the family traveled through 12 states, ending their journey in Cohasset.

The Higginsons consider themselves very lucky to have been able to leave the city and arrive safely at Steve's parents Charlie and Genevra Higginson's house on Atlantic Avenue. Although their home sustained minimal flood damage from the storm and none from the levee breach, there is no running water or electricity. The family will remain in Cohasset until the area becomes habitable again.

"We're happy to be in a very wonderful community and to have a safe place to be," said Collette, adding her family has summered in Cohasset for many years.

The glamorous life

Teens, parents take classic Miami beach break

By LARRY KATZ

MIAMI -- This is how cool this city is: When I told my two impossible-to-please teenagers we were going there on a family vacation, they actually said, "Great." And smiled.

Score one for Dad.

Quite likely my kids' vision of what Miami held in store was informed by watching MTV spring break specials. But even though our week there did not include hip-hop-fueled beach parties, all-night raves or J.Lo sightings, 16-year-old Samantha and 13-year-old Alex were not disappointed. They both had a blast. So did Cora, their 8-year-old sister. And, I am happy to say, their parents, too. Miami is ripe with pleasures besides ogling the buff bods in bathing suits parading through South Beach.

In search of a classic Miami Beach experience, we bedded down at a classic, Miami Beach's biggest hotel, the Fontainebleau. This fabled '50s landmark, where Frank Sinatra, Sammy Davis Jr. and Dean Martin played and stayed, recently underwent a $400 million renovation for its 50th birthday celebration this year. The endless lobby, the comfortably redecorated rooms and the curving white building itself still evoke the glamour of an era long past, but post-renovation the Fountainbleu feels fashionably modern.

But what impressed my teenagers was the hotel's history. They didn't care -- and why would they? -- that Jackie Gleason based his TV show here and Sean Connery wandered the grounds as Agent 007 in "Goldfinger." What wowed Alex was realizing that this was the joint that earned Al Pacino's nod of approval when he played Tony Montana in "Scarface." And Samantha was giddy with delight when she learned that the characters from "The O.C." -- her favorite TV show -- chose the Fontainebleau as their digs in the show's spring break episode.

Beyond the considerable glitz factor, for many visitors, especially young ones, the best part of the Fontainebleau is its extravagant pools. You easily could pass the day -- or days -- lounging around the expansive main pool, built around a man-made rock formation complete with waterfall.

The Cohasset Mariner caught up with Principal Janet Sheehan at the Osgood School last Friday as she was making preparations for the opening of school.

Name: Janet Sheehan.

Occupation: Principal, Joseph Osgood School.

Best day(s) of your life: The days my daughters Alison and Jennifer were born.

Best vacation: Cruising to the Cape and Islands and along the Maine coast with my husband, daughters, and parents on their boat.

Favorite season: Summer.

Favorite holiday: Christmas.

Favorite junk food: Peanut M & Ms.

Best book: Jane Austen's "Pride and Prejudice."

Best movie: "Breakfast at Tiffany's."

Best TV show: "Law and Order."

Pet peeve: Rude drivers.

Most memorable moment: Seeing my grandfather's home in Ireland — a thatch-roofed cottage by the sea.

Goal: To lead a professional learning community that is focused on excellence in teaching and learning.

Person I'd most like to meet: Any of the Founding Fathers.

Biggest worry: Acts of terrorism.

Best part of Cohasset: The children, of course! Second best would be the picturesque coastline.

Candidates sought for housing partnership

Would help with LIP projects

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"With all the issues ahead of us, it makes sense."
— Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed.

The Cohasset Housing Partnership has been reinstated. Having experienced a heyday in the1980s, the new climate of promoting senior housing projects in town has spurred a rekindling of the committee.

The committee will be responsible for providing a variety of perspectives on creating affordable housing in town and will be guided by the rules and regulations of the Massachusetts Housing Partnership. The MHP is a state agency that encourages the formation and ongoing efforts of town appointed partnerships and housing committees by providing financial assistance, training sessions and informational resource materials.

"With all the issues ahead of us, it makes sense," said Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said from previous experience, he would recommend having a wide variety of expertise on the committee including someone from the Cohasset Housing Authority, real estate and banking fields, and members of the clergy. Griffin said he worked with a housing partnership while serving as Town Manager for Bourne. He said representatives with those areas of expertise "were invaluable to us."

Planning board member Peter Pratt, who has been an advocate for reestablishing the housing partnership, said he sees the lead mission of the committee as being the administrators of the Local Initiative Program, which seeks to stimulate the production of affordable housing through cooperation between municipalities and developers.

The Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District that was passed by Town Meeting in November 2002 also encourages developers to build a variety of affordable housing in town. For the affordable units to "count" – they would be built under the LIP program. Cohasset is trying to meet a state-mandated threshold having 10 percent of its housing stock affordable.

In other words, the Local Initiative Program, dubbed LIP, is the mechanism by which the town makes sure affordable units qualify or "count" toward the number of total affordable units. It helps create affordable housing by providing technical assistance to communities and developers who are working together to create affordable housing for low and moderate income households. With LIP projects, the town and developer must work together; and the Department of Housing and Community Development (DHCD) provides technical support to both the town and developer.

Chapter 40B — the state affordable housing law — has left Cohasset vulnerable to the comprehensive permit process because the town has so little housing deemed affordable by state standards.

LIPs — which have been dubbed "friendly 40-Bs" — are developed through a town's zoning while comprehensive permit projects, such as Avalon's proposed 100-unit 40B apartment complex off Rte. 3A, can skirt local zoning regulations.

Under the LIP process, towns can make decisions based more on their individual needs, including everything down to the design of the buildings and the landscaping plans. LIP projects serve as a way for a town to become proactively involved with the development projects in their area.

Pratt said with all the state housing regulations, there needs to be a group that can wade through all the information and advise the town on various housing-related matters, including things as simple as what will and will not count. "We need a resource," he said.

The housing partnership will be made up of nine residents, and the board of selectmen asks anyone interested in participating to send a letter of interest along with a résumé to its office at 41 Highland Avenue. The board will be working on a charter for the committee, which will be ready by the time the committee is appointed.

Town health and legal costs are under the microscope

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"I see this more as a problem of accountability. That's the bigger issue."
— Pat Waters, advisory committee

Legal fees and health insurance costs have the potential to become budget busters. To that end, Town Manager Bill Griffin has begun investigating how Cohasset deals with both, to see if any cost-saving measures are possible.

During the Aug. 30 advisory committee meeting, Griffin reported he has taken a closer look at the legal services rendered for general government use for fiscal 2005 and will begin doing the same for fiscal 2006, tracking it as the year goes on. He said he had not examined the school department's legal expenses.

"There are three organizations that use Town Counsel but get charged directly," said Griffin. The water department, sewer commission and community preservation committee all have enterprise funds which can cover any legal expenses incurred, and are therefore less of a problem in terms of the town's budget.

However, advisory committee chairman Donna McGee pointed out in the case of the water and sewer departments, legal costs can be passed on to rate payers in the form of increased water or sewer fees.

Advisory committee member Pat Waters said in his view, the problem does not as much stem from those departments, but the other departments that do not have any money to pay for legal services and do not need approval from either the town manager or selectmen to use counsel.

"I see this more as a problem of accountability. That's the bigger issue," he said.

Griffin will continue to look into ways to help curb legal fees and will discuss the issue with the board of selectmen at an upcoming meeting.

Advisory committee member Roger Hill brought forth an idea for Griffin to consider in regards to health insurance. He suggested the town increase the co-pay for employees, but reimburse employees for the difference between what it is currently, so the amount paid by employees would not change. Increasing the co-pays would decrease premiums.

"It's an interesting idea," said Griffin. However, he said he did not want to discuss health insurance at length, as any changes would have to be agreed upon during a collective bargaining session with all four unions. Collective bargaining is held in executive session.

Currently, Griffin said there are between 750 and 800 active participants in the town's health insurance and making the changes might cause an administrative burden. He said he would look into the matter and see if it would be feasible.

The town buys its health insurance through the MIAA — a self-insured pool of the Massachusetts Municipal Association.

The advisory committee will meet again Thursday, Oct. 6.

Fed up teachers hold informational picket

McGrail said negotiations began with the school committee in November 2004. She said there have been roughly 12 negotiation sessions since then.

"We still hope to be able to work out an equitable contract," said McGrail, but added the teachers want the community and the parents to know currently, a contract does not exist. "This is a positive way of going forward," she said.

School committee chairman Jamie Williams said in the interest of speaking with one voice, the school committee agreed to defer all questions relating to the picketing to Supt. Denise Walsh.

In a press release, Walsh stated the teachers' association and the school committee are at a point of impasse on some critical issues, and the school committee has "requested that a mediator become involved to assist in moving the process forward."

"Fiscal 2006 looks to be one of the most difficult fiscal years for the town and the school department. The fiscal 2006 school department budget only allowed for increases in fixed costs such as utilities, heat, transportation and special education tuitions. A failed override in June only made a difficult situation worse. We had hoped to provide additional staff to reduce class size and add electives at the high school but none of that will be possible at the current funding level," Walsh stated.

"This is a very painful thing for teachers to do."

— Patricia McGrail, Cohasset Teachers Association

"We sincerely hope that the start of the school year will not be disrupted for our children and the services we have been able to offer to the Cohasset community and that you have come to expect, continue as planned," Walsh stated.

McGrail said the informational picket stems from four points teachers feel a fair contract must comply with.

- Fair raises in an amount that keeps up with inflation.
- Maintaining tuition reimbursement rates.
- More preparation time for elementary level teachers.
- Fair compensation package and benefits for nurses.

McGrail said Cohasset is competing with other area schools and without raises which reflect an increase in living cost, the town will not be able to attract a high-quality teaching staff.

"Every town has fiscal issues, but we have to be concerned about attracting and retaining quality teachers," she said, adding it is important to attract young teachers with enthusiasm in a competitive market.

McGrail explained a zero percent raise, as is currently planned in the budget, will result in a pay cut for more than half the teaching staff. Insurance rates have also gone up. "Our actual take home pay is less" than last year's she said.

"We're afraid of losing a lot of our teachers, and we're starting to see that already," she said.

Maintaining tuition reimbursement rates is also a big part of the teachers' goal, as Massachusetts State Law requires teachers take courses to stay certified. Young teachers are required to begin the path to earning their master's degree shortly after they begin teaching. Taking courses costs money and it is increasingly becoming more expensive.

"We're not looking to expand (the reimbursement), just looking to maintain, and again, it's a way of attracting quality teachers," she said.

McGrail said elementary level teachers have an expanding amount of curriculum and instructional demands and they need more preparation time to get things done. In addition, teachers are working together on lessons and team planning requires coordinating time to meet as well. Administrative tasks have also increased, and the combination has led to a dire need for more in-school preparation time.

But it is not only the teachers who are in need of equitable solutions, it is the school nurses as well. McGrail said some nurses are paid less than $30,000 per year, which is less than neighboring school districts.

"We have to be able to attract and retain nurses, and they have to continue with their education too," she said.

To drive the point home, the Cohasset Teachers' Association has a set of job actions it intends to implement.

"There are a huge number of student activities that depend on voluntary contributions of time from staff," she said, and those will stop. The Camp Marist trip which is held at the beginning of each school year for incoming freshmen is not happening this year. In addition, as the year goes on, without a contract in place, overnight music trips, week-long trips to Costa Rica and Belize, the powder puff football game for junior and senior girls, and dances will not have teacher chaperones.

"Time is not going to be volunteered anymore," said McGrail, but added the teachers' union hopes to be able to settle the contract so they will be able to offer these programs to the students.

McGrail also said there has been an issue with teachers using their planning time to substitute for other teachers. "We won't be doing it anymore," she said.

Informational picketing took place Wednesday only, both before and after school.

While showing support for her former colleagues, Jo-Ellen Wood, left, a retired teacher, gets a warm hug from Heidi Olson, right, a middle school teacher, during the informational picket before school on Wednesday.

McGrail said it did not interfere with the school day, as the teachers are still providing the best education possible for the students.

"We are proud of the education we provide and we want to maintain that. It was so fun getting back into the routine on the first day, and it's working with these kids that we really love."

Bloomfield's book aims to entertain and inform

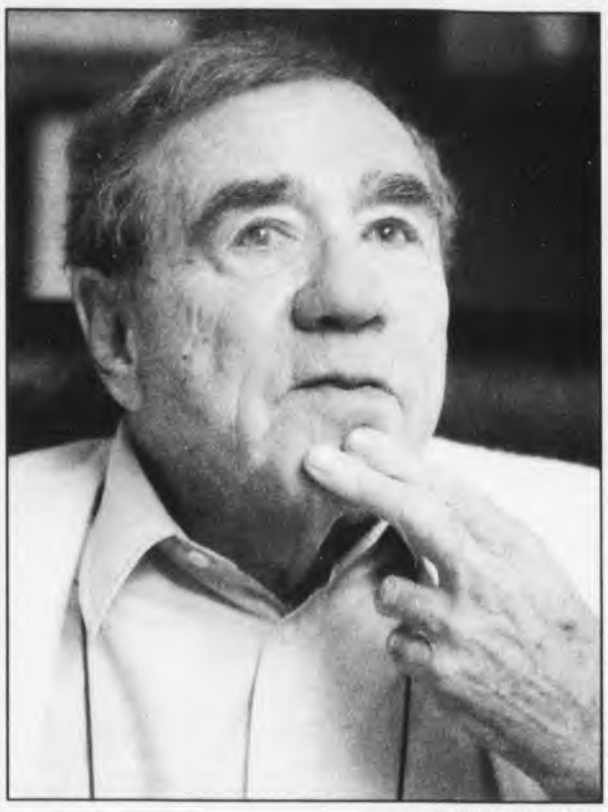
Former diplomat lends perspective

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

"My strategy was to teach history and to get what I believe are some of the more practical ideas of US foreign policy into the book, in a way that's informative and entertaining for people to read," says Lincoln Palmer Bloomfield.

Bloomfield, a longtime Cohasset resident, has spent more than 50 years of his life in public service, as a member of the US State Department, National Security Council and as a professor of political science at MIT.

Perhaps a writer and scholar of history at heart, he's also the author of numerous books about foreign policy, international relations and conflict management strategies as well as many more articles published in journals such as World Magazine, Christian Science Monitor, New York Times, Boston Globe and Newsweek.



But it was, of all things, Bloomfield's short stint as a TV history/talk show host that he said set the shape and tone of his latest book release. From 1989 to 1992, the author hosted the Monitor Channel's Fifty Years Ago Today, a show where Bloomfield read headlines from exactly 50 years past and then conducted thoughtful as well as witty panel discussions recalling the chosen event.

It was here that the show's one-time host learned "the value of bringing history to life in 3D, ... through a personalized lens," as Bloomfield recollects in the opening section of "Accidental Encounters with History" (and some lessons learned).

The author adds Accidental Encounters picks up where he left off with Fifty Years Ago Today, a book "more fun to write than its more seriously scholarly predecessors," and aiming "to entertain as well as inform."

"Accidental Encounters with History" is published by Cohasset's HotHouse Press and is set for a Sept. 16 release date. The author will celebrate with a series of in-store reading/signing appearances in the Boston and South Shore areas in the coming weeks, including Buttonwood Books in Cohasset, Sept. 15 at 7 p.m., MIT Coop in Cambridge, Sept. 29 at 5 p.m., and Barnes & Noble in Hingham, Nov. 12 at 1:30 p.m. More dates will surely be announced.

"I'm interested in getting people interested in serious things, using an informal approach, with stories and humor, to make history and foreign affairs interesting enough for people to pay attention," said Bloomfield, now 85, at his Beach Street house overlooking Little Harbor, his home in Cohasset since 1957

Lincoln Bloomfield will discuss "Accidental Encounters With History: and Some Lessons Learned" on Thursday, Sept. 15, 7 p.m., at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Shaw's Plaza, Cohasset.

"I'm interested in getting people interested in serious things, using an informal approach, with stories and humor, to make history and foreign affairs interesting enough for people to pay attention."
— Lincoln Palmer Bloomfield

HotHouse describes Accidental Encounters as candid, witty, and often anecdotal, observations of the national and global political scene. Outside the publishing house, some notable readers have added their support, as the book's cover jacket is adorned with quoted praise from such famous Bloomfield friends as former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and US Ambassador to NATO Harlan Cleveland.

In the State Department of the 1940s and 50s, Bloomfield worked under inimitable Eisenhower Secretary of State John Foster Dulles (the author's chapter devoted to Dulles, "The Genetically Engineered Secretary of State," recollects his observations of Dulles's dogged diplomatic idealism and zealotry favored over rationale), and was present at the birth of the United Nations. In the 70s, he was a Carter administration White House staff member. Later, as professor emeritus at MIT in the 90s, he helped develop the diplomatic methods of role-playing "war games," meant to force the participants into a deeper understanding of foreign political opponents.

Despite such noteworthy credentials, Bloomfield regards that he's sometimes been mislabeled as a former career diplomat in past news headlines.

"My career has been in bureaucracy and education, rather than diplomacy. I'm not completely comfortable with the diplomat title," Bloomfield said.

Accidental Encounters finally arrives at two main themes: a greater concern for governing through bureaucracy as well as a deeper need for rationality in policymaking. Bloomfield elaborated on both these proposed energies.

"For 250 years, the United States has oscillated between affairs at home and purporting to be a model for the rest of the world, essentially with the objective of crusading, acting as missionaries and intervening," Bloomfield says. "And history has proven that crusades usually don't work. The ongoing crusade to turn the Middle East into something else has too often led to disillusionment and retreat. Historically I see a pattern where the U.S. ought to think three times before becoming a global missionary.

"Mr. Bush, for instance, I think has been a weak president. I believe his sense of history is weak, he's too committed to his own fairly sketchy ideas of the world, and doesn't listen to important sources of criticism and advice," Bloomfield says. "The result to this point has been a brilliant initial military action followed by a disastrous lack of planning and understanding. The Bush administration essentially misled the American people by tying Iraq to the 9/11 attacks, when all official intelligence confirms that there was zero connection. Still the pro-war spinmeisters keep trying to push the connection in their attempts to justify the war, and the result seems to be that it just keeps creating more terrorists."

In regard to the ongoing issue of the need for reform at the United Nations, which Bloomfield ironically proclaims in the book as an organization that "has become indispensable before it has become effective," the author added these insights.

"I happen to believe that after the UN passed 16 resolutions demanding that Saddam Hussein comply with the terms of the first Gulf War cease-fire that the decision to go after Saddam was justified and I supported that decision, and it would have been the end of the UN to not do so.

"But since then the lying about the weapons of mass destruction and the continuosu bungling by the administration and the UN turned my enthusiasm off. It's simply been great incompetence all around," Bloomfield says.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Vehicle break-ins

Within the past few weeks, police have received several reports of motor vehicle break-ins occurring during the overnight hours. Most of the vehicles involved had been left unlocked, although there have been several forced breaks. Items such as purses, wallets, cell phones, and cameras have been taken. The most recent break-in was witnessed by the victim, who described the subject as a white male in his teens, about 5 feet 6 inches tall, medium build, wearing a gray hooded sweatshirt and jeans. The subject fled on foot when spotted. Residents are reminded to remove valuables and lock their vehicles at night. Anyone with information about these break-ins is asked to call 781-383-1055 ext1047. Callers may remain anonymous.

Sept. 11 ceremony Sunday on Common

There will be a ceremony on Cohasset Common this Sunday at 8:45 a.m. to mark the fourth anniversary of Sept. 11. Members of the police and fire departments as well as the American Legion will participate, along with local clergy. The public is encouraged to attend.

St. John family appreciates support

The St. John family wants people to know that Mark St. John, who was severely injured in a head-on collision of Rte. 3A Aug. 23, remains in stable but critical condition at Mass General Hospital.

"My family appreciates all the support of our friends and neighbors," says Mark's brother, Brendan St. John. "I know my mother would like to thank the Cohasset Fire Department.

"We appreciate all the continuing thoughts and prayers for Mark," Brendan said.

Town to receive reimbursement check

On Tuesday, Sept. 13 at 9:45 a.m., State Treasurer Timothy Cahill will pay a visit to the Deer Hill library, where he will present a check for $19.6 million to the town of Cohasset for renovations to the Deer Hill School and Cohasset Middle High School. State Sen. Robert Hedlund and state Rep. Garrett Bradley along with local officials will attend.

Director of Finance Michael Buckley said the payment represents 75 percent of the 60 percent reimbursement the town has been scheduled to receive from the state for the roughly $42 million project. The town will receive the state's remaining roughly $6 million within the year as a lump sum.

Rooms in Bloom repairs under way

This week Rooms in Bloom, a shop on South Main Street, is undergoing repairs to fix the damage following a car accident last month.

Police Chief James Hussey said at about 11 a.m., Tuesday (Aug. 16), an elderly woman apparently parked in front of the building and inadvertently hit the gas pedal when the car was in drive and went into the building.

He said both the driver, who was 90 years old, and her passenger were transported to the hospital but were not seriously injured. He declined to provide the name of the driver.

Hussey said the police department did file a notice with the registry stating the elderly woman should not be able to continue driving.

Darilynn Evans, shop owner, said two large picture windows shattered spreading shards of glass throughout the store. No one in the store was injured.

Despite the tarps and having no glass in the windows (plywood is put up at night), the shop has remained open through it all, Evans said.

Building Inspector Bob Egan said there was no major structural damage to the building. Repair estimates are $15,000, he said.

Rooms in Bloom is open Monday through Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. and Sunday from noon to 5 p.m.

Save Sept. 22, Thursday evening and bring your family and friends to share a meal at 6:30. Tickets will be sold for $10. Watch for more news about this event.

SUPPORT GRIDIRON CLUB

The Cohasset Gridiron Club is nearing the deadline for ads to be placed in the 2005 Football Program. The ads and program help to fund scholarships for deserving Cohasset High School football players. Please contact Frank and Sharon at 383- 2155 to place your ad.

BIG APPLE TRIP

The South Shore Art Center invites the public to join fellow art enthusiasts and artists on a day trip to New York City and the Museum of Modern Art. Guests will enjoy comfortable motor coach transport to and from MoMA's spectacularly renovated building. Visitors will be on their own to spend time in the museum, enjoy lunch in the city and depart in the early evening.

The bus will leave the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset at 6 a.m. Saturday morning, Oct. 22 and arrive at MoMA by 10:30. Admission to the Museum is included in the package and a light dinner will be served on board during the relaxing trip home. Fall is the perfect time to visit the Big Apple and explore the magnificent Museum of Modern Art—home of the world's preeminent collection of modern and contemporary art. Join members of the Art Center, gallery artists and others for a creative day away. Cost for the trip is $125 all inclusive. To reserve a space call 781-383-2787. Space is limited — please reserve early.

FIELD HOCKEY BOOSTERS

Come out and support the field hockey boosters at Papa Gino's tight on Sept 14 from 4-9p.m. A portion of the evening's proceeds will go to the field hockey team booster which hopes to earn money for their growing booster club to help support the team's needs. The members of the team will be passing out hand outs at the high school and coupons will be available at Papa Gino's to turn in that evening. Make it a pizza night!

WEATHER FORECASTING

Cohasset native, Robert Thompson from the National Weather Service Forecasting Office in Taunton, will speak about local maritime weather events that shaped history and how to forecast hazardous conditions. Many business are based on weather forecasts such as if extra fuel should be added to aircraft, release or not release water from reservoirs, apply freeze protection to crops, line up extra snow plowing, cancel school, etc. The event is on Sept. 14 at the South Shore Community Center with the presentation at 6:30, no charge. Reservations are required for light dinner, $3 donation to our sponsors Cohasset Elder Affairs.

NEW OCTOGENARIAN

The Snowdales are celebrating. Nancy Snowdale turned 80 years young on Sept. 2! Her grandson, Michael Snowdale, gave her a special gift by making dean's list at Endicott College during the Spring semester while majoring in finance! So when you see Nancy around town, be sure to wish her a happy birthday!!!

Mom runs to help new Cohasset-Scituate swim team

By Mary Jane Hanron
CORRESPONDENT

Fundraising and fervor for the new Cohasset/ Scituate Swim will cross the state line into New Hampshire next weekend! Cohasset mom, Elizabeth Kissick will join a team of runners on Sept. 16 & 17 in the race, 'Reach the Beach", a 200-mile relay through the mountains and parks leading to the shore of the Granite State.

Kissick is a member of the board raising funds to support a high school swim team for students in Cohasset and Scituate. As the only parent in this dedicated group without children eligible this year to participate on the team, she sees this cause as an important venture for the future. As a result, she is donating monies pledged in support of her participation in the relay to the Cohasset High School Swim Team account.

"There is a lot of enthusiasm and commitment among parents in these towns to make it happen. Once it is in place, I'm sure it will grow and thrive. It is such a great sport for kids of every age."
— Elizabeth Kissick

Kissick's three children already are accomplished swimmers and participate in the "Waves" a community swim program in which youth of various age groups compete with other teams in the region. Regular sessions are held in Weymouth under the direction of coach, Mike Riley.

Jake, 13, Kissick's oldest child is entering the seventh grade in Cohasset this fall and holds many titles and records in community swimming. Despite his achievements in the sport, he states his favorite part of being on a school swim team would be, "having fun with friends." His mom is hopeful that her support of this team now will help to raise awareness of the importance of swim programs in the public schools.

Following closely behind their older brother are Hope, 11 entering fifth grade and Cole, 9 entering fourth grade. Both were named 2005 "Swimmer of the Year" for their accomplishments in the Waves program.

The swimmers are judged on speed and technique and their participation on teams allows them to travel around the state to participate in meets.

"Swimming gives us confidence and helps us to learn about reaching our goals," said Hope. She and her brother, Cole proudly display their collections of swimming medals in their rooms.

"We label them so we remember the time we won them," shared Cole. He and his sister showed the assortment of engraved discs on colorful ribbons, each with a small label attached citing details and dates of the award.

"I'll be thrilled to have a swim team established at the high school so my kids can participate when they are old enough," said Kissick. "There is a lot of enthusiasm and commitment among parents in these towns to make it happen. Once it is in place, I'm sure it will grow and thrive. It is such a great sport for kids of every age."

Kissick's training sessions for "Reach the Beach" include distance running and yoga. As one of 12 members of a team in the two-day New Hampshire event, she will run three legs of the race in relay style as the others follow in a vehicle. Beginning in the mountains at Bretton Woods, the trail will wind through the scenic roads of the state parks and end at Hampton Beach. The Atlantic Ocean comes into view at the point in the relay when there are only 10 miles left to reach the finish line. This seventh annual relay is divided into 36 legs run by the 12 team members. It has been described by observers in the past as a "running adventure."

Looking forward to the event, Kissick shared thoughts about her participation. "I expect it to be exhilarating," she said. "It's such a pretty time of year. The foliage will surround us and I will be outside in the clear, beautiful, fresh air. I knew if I did it, I wanted to support a cause and I decided that giving donations to the Swim Team would be great."

So far, she has earned $1000 in pledges for the event. Kissick is also a jewelry designer and founder of ekdesigns, an upscale collection of handmade jewelry. Created from gemstones, crystals hand blown beads and exclusive frames and toggles, the line is found in fine jewelry stores and boutiques across the country. She is giving a bracelet to anyone pledging $100 or more. An elegant strand of sterling silver beads, adorned with a whimsical "flip- flop" charm, this piece will be an admired symbol of support for the local high school swim team.

For more information or to make a contribution, please call Helen Daley: 781-383-2978. Checks should be payable to "Town of Cohasset High School Swim Team Gift Account."

Reservoir dam protects area from local flooding

24-hour cameras are in the works

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The possibilities for disaster in any town are endless, and often expecting the unexpected still doesn't cover all the bases.

But Cohasset, through its office of emergency management, is doing its best to prepare for the worst-case scenarios, although planning can't always fully prepare a town to deal with a real-life crisis.

"You can't think of every scenario," said deputy director of emergency management Glenn Pratt. Thinking of the endless possibilities is usually unrealistic and causes more panic than is necessary, he said.

But preparing for the likely disasters can make all the difference. History has taught those living in coastal communities like Cohasset that storms can bring flooding any time of year — which becomes even worse when coupled with a high tide.

"Flooding is one of our biggest threats as its the most likely thing to happen," said Pratt. However, Cohasset is a town full of water and the possibility of floods is by no means limited to those with beachfront property.

The Aaron River Reservoir Dam, located at the end of Beechwood Street, impounds more than 570 million gallons of water in the Aaron River Reservoir to provide an abundant water supply for the people of Cohasset. If there was ever a breach in the dam, there is the possibility a situation similar to what southeastern Louisiana is currently facing could take place in town, albeit on a much smaller scale.

Pratt said currently, the dam is in "great shape" and it is constantly being monitored to ensure its structural integrity.

"It's only about 25 years old," he said, but the Army Corps of Engineers requires routine inspections. However, as the years go by, Pratt said there is always the possibility the unthinkable will happen, and the dam will rupture.

> "It could rain a monsoon for a month straight and no dam can handle that."
> — Glenn Pratt, emergency management

"It could rain a monsoon for a month straight and no dam can handle that," he said. "It could break like we've seen on TV down in New Orleans," he said, although the flooding would be much less severe.

Hurricane Katrina raged through New Orleans Aug. 29, with high winds and torrential downpours. The damage was significant, but the following day, catastrophe struck when breaches in the levee system on Lake Pontchartrain caused a flash flood that has left 80 percent of New Orleans under water.

Pratt said Cohasset has two emergency spillways to handle floodwaters from the reservoir, but there would be a significant wall of water that would rush forth. Doane Street would experience significant flooding and the water would travel through the woods in the direction of Scituate across Rte. 3A by the Hassan Sign Company and the Jack Conway Real Estate office.

He said the water would roll through North Scituate and down Gannet Road toward the marshes, as well as veer to the left in the direction of South Main Street and flow into the Gulf. Pratt said North Scituate would be impacted the most if the dam broke. There is a set of protocol in place for Cohasset to notify Scituate officials if the situation ever arises, and that town has an inundation plan in place.

"It would be a very bad situation," in North Scituate center, he said.

Pratt said it would take 45 minutes for the water to reach North Scituate after the dam broke, which would provide ample time for the warning to go out. He said during situations where a dam is under significant pressure, there are telltale signs that surface which indicate it is about to give way. He explained measures would be taken before any breakage occurred, such as opening the gates to help alleviate some of the pressure.

Pratt said the emergency management office is currently working on an initiative which would install 24-hour surveillance cameras on the whole reservoir for constant monitoring. The water treatment plant is now operating 24-hours a day and the surveillance video could be monitored from there. In the future, Pratt said it is a goal of the town to find a way for dispatchers at the police department to have access to monitoring equipment as well.

"This is all stuff in the works," he said, adding it will be beneficial for the town to have a constant means of knowing what is going on by the reservoir.

But flooding could also come in the form of a ruptured water storage tank. Pratt said the water treatment plant on King Street has a 2 million gallon water storage tank, which if ruptured could send flood waters rushing down Pond Street, at least as far as the middle high school, which is used as an evacuation facility. While he said the building is made of brick and could likely withstand the impact, water would flow down to the lowest level, which would likely cause damage to the school's boiler room, impacting its ability to serve as a shelter.

But Pratt points out it would take a lot to rupture the tank, such as an airplane crashing on the plant. However, being under a Logan Airport flight path, the thought is not out of the question. Airplane crashes are covered extensively in the town's emergency management plan.

"That could be a bigger disaster," than any flooding would be, he said, but the town has a plan should it ever occur.

We'll make you smile.

is bringing its own rescue equipment, will focus on domestic and farm animals. Any wild animals that are in distress will be put down. "We won't let them suffer," he said.

"This is what we train for," said Murphy, who recently completed a training seminar sponsored by MEMA on animals and disaster. "However, it's going to be sad once we're there and see the reality of it all."

Renee Bafalis, spokeswoman for the Humane Society of the United States, says the Humane Society is working with the Louisiana Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (LSPCA). Humane Society teams, like the one Murphy is serving on, conduct water rescue and search and rescue.

The LSPCA, which has received the OK from homeowners or their neighbors, has given them authority to break into dwellings to retrieve pets. The teams also ask those, who stayed behind, to allow the rescue workers to take their pets to a shelter. "We assure them, we will take care of the animals so they feel they can leave," Bafalis said.

The animals are initially taken to Jefferson Seed in New Orleans, which is an agricultural supply company that was undamaged in the storm. There the animals are given food and water and are looked over by a veterinarian. Later that day, the animals are taken to a rodeo site in Gonsales where they are processed and sheltered in the stalls. If the animals are sick they are taken to a veterinary hospital in Kenner, La., and once stabilized are moved to the Gonsales facility.

> "There's a tremendous need. Up until now the rescue efforts have been dealing with people."
> — Paul Murphy, animal control officer

Bafalis explained that at Gonsales all animals are logged in with their photograph and any information, such as the location or address where they were found. That information goes onto the web site petfinder.com where owners can search for their pets. She said pets that are not claimed or identified by their owner in 15 days will be put up for adoption.

She said some people, who cannot care for their pets, have left them at the shelter but return to feed and walk them each day.

Bafalis — who explained the Gonsales shelter is home to dogs, cats, birds, goats and even the draft horses that pulled the carriages in New Orleans — said the task ahead is a daunting one. "It's estimated that 69 percent of the population has pets," she said. "We don't know how many (evacuees) left with their animals."

"If we can provide any help at all that's what we're going to do."

Cohasset Town Manager Bill Griffin said both he and Police Chief James Hussey agreed Murphy should go. "We thought it was one way the town itself could assist in the recovery effort," he said.

Hussey praised Murphy for his efforts.

"My hat's off to Paul Murphy, who through his membership and participation in the Humane Society of the United States, was offered the opportunity to go down there and assist with the recovery effort," Hussey said. "We were happy to support his willingness to go down there and take care of business."

Hussey said Murphy is on paid leave for two weeks and will receive his salary while he is away. Emergency animal calls will be handled through the police department. Animal control officers from Scituate and Hingham will provide assistance if needed.

Norwell Town Administrator James Boudreau said Norwell would handle emergency animal calls through the police department and has reciprocal agreements with surrounding towns. "We will handle it the same way we do when Paul is on vacation," Boudreau said.

"Paul asked to go and take the van," he said. "There was no way we could refuse.

Flash back: Earlier this summer, Cohasset entered into a joint agreement with Norwell to share animal control duties as a cost-saving measure. Cohasset compensates Murphy for 20 hours per week for his normal duties. While on duty, Murphy responds to calls in both Cohasset and Norwell. Norwell covers any calls in that town outside the 20 hours.

In exchange for Cohasset's paying Murphy's regular salary, Norwell provides the animal control vehicle, including maintenance and insurance.

Hingham Lumber holds fundraising drive

Hingham Lumber off Rte. 3A in Cohasset will be holding a Hurricane Katrina fundraising drive on Saturday, Sept. 10.

Ten percent of all purchases made on that day will go to one of three charities: the Salvation Army, the American Red Cross and the Katrina Relief Fund. To encourage people to stop by and just donate, if they don't need to buy anything, the lumber company will also be holding a hamburger and hot dog cook-out from 11 a.m.-2 p.m. WATD will conduct a remote broadcast from 2:30-5 p.m.

Event slated for Katrina relief

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Two Cohasset women have established a local Katrina Relief Fund and have planned a benefit evening at the American Legion Hall off Summer Street to attract more donations.

Ann Marie Goff of South Main Street and Maureen Harrold of Locust Road say they couldn't sit back and watch the aftermath of the devastating hurricane without getting involved.

"We've both watched the unbelievable devastation on TV and thought we could get local folks together and do something," Harrold says.

The women are planning a benefit evening from 7 to 11 p.m., Saturday, Oct. 1 at the legion hall, which is being donated. Tickets are $25 per person, all the proceeds will go to the fund. The women have opened a special account at Pilgrim Cooperative Bank.

The evening will include donated food. The DJ is donating his services as is the bartender.

Goff and Harrold hope to raise at least $10,000, which will be sent to the American Red Cross. Raffle donations, which can be almost anything from TVs to gift certificates, for the event are being sought.

They plan to solicit the help of friends to make the food.

"I woke up Tuesday (after the hurricane) and decided this is what I was going to do," Goff recalls.

Harrold says she has visited both Biloxi, Miss. and New Orleans.

"Seeing what I saw down there and now seeing it on TV," she says. "It's overwhelming. The places have been ripped out by the roots."

Contributions to the fund may be sent to the Katrina Relief Fund, General Delivery, Cohasset, MA 02025.

For tickets, information or to donate raffle items, call Goff at 383-2684 or Harrold at 383-0782.

Emergency plan sets protocol

Deputy director of emergency management Glenn Pratt said Lehr has been the director for roughly 25 years.

"He's been to a phenomenal number of seminars" and is well prepared for any emergency that might come along, Pratt said. There are codes and passwords necessary to provide to various agencies during an emergency, and Lehr has all that information readily available.

There would be a command structure and Pratt explained a list of people who have signed up to provide volunteer services during an emergency would be appointed to handle public safety, public relations, finances, and many other important roles which all work together during an emergency.

The town would follow the "National Incident Management System," which is a program being pushed by the Office of Homeland Security. Pratt said a large number of people need to be trained in town to become certified in carrying out the various management system initiatives.

"We're hoping to get 20 people certified this month," Pratt said, adding those who take leading roles during an emergency not only include the police and fire chiefs, but school principals, DPW workers, and a number of others. Training is required "so everyone knows what's going on and how the system works," Pratt said.

Pratt said the town manager would take an active role in providing the public with information during a crisis. In addition, the chairman of the board of selectmen would also have to sign off on certain decisions during an emergency situation. All directives would be given by Lehr.

To notify the public of an emergency situation, Pratt said his committee would first make phone calls — assuming the phone lines are working. Pratt said the town is currently working to purchase a reverse 911 telephone message system, similar to the technology currently being used by the schools. A pre-recorded message describing the situation would be sent to every household in town, letting residents know what the course of action should be.

If the phone lines are not working, Pratt said emergency personnel would begin going door-to-door or shouting the message over a portable public announcement system from a police or fire truck. In addition, the information would be passed on to the radio and television broadcast networks.

In the event of an emergency, the police headquarters becomes the emergency management control center. If anything should happen to the police headquarters, the water treatment plant on King Street serves as the backup control center. It too has a generator and telecommunication capabilities, as well as enough room for emergency vehicle staging.

If residents are required to evacuate, Cohasset High School is the emergency shelter for the town. Pratt said because the building is large, it can accommodate a number of people, and it also has a generator which can keep the heat going in the winter. It is also on high ground. In addition, the building has a cafeteria and kitchen for cooking, and is stocked with food and drinks during the school year. The school's buses could be used to transport a large number of evacuees.

However, if the kitchen runs out of supplies or if it was needed during the summer months when supplies aren't as readily available, the town has an agreement with Stop and Shop, which will let the town purchase food during a crisis. Pratt said that is why it is so important to have an appointed person to handle the finances during an emergency because someone would need to pay that bill.

Pratt explained in the 1960s, there was a big push on civil defense as there is now for homeland security. He said over the years, the supplies built up during the 1960s have been depleted, and the emergency management office has been working to bring those reserves back up. All emergency supplies are stored in the Deer Hill School basement, and Lehr has a thorough record of everything.

When the Deer Hill school was remodeled, Pratt said the basement was specifically designated as an emergency storage facility, as supplies had formerly been stored at the middle-high school, but had been moved around a lot and were hard to keep track of.

In those supplies are a number of cots and blankets. However, "We do need to add to them," Pratt said.

More than anything, Pratt said the town needs volunteers with specialties who could assist during an emergency. There are many areas of expertise needed beyond the medical and psychological experts who can help with the physical and mental well-being of residents in a crisis. Those with building experience, those who can operate heavy machinery, those who are good with finances or can provide public relations assistance are all very valuable.

"All you can do is be as ready as you can," he said, and the more resources available, the better.

Cohasset updated its emergency management plan and submitted it to the state for approval in late December 2004. After Sept. 11, there were new directives put in place by the Department of Public Health and the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency, also known as MEMA.

The town needed to make sure it complied and was prepared to handle not only a wide scope of possible terrorist threats, but the typical blizzard and hurricane emergency scenarios. The town's plans had not been updated since 1999.

Cohasset's report was so comprehensive, it was recognized by MEMA, and officials there told the town the plan would be used as a model for other communities. The document is not considered a public document due to the nature of the information it contains.

To help put the plan to work, the town has hired a company that conducts mock emergency drills, and the town will be taking part in one Oct. 19. Pratt said the company will phone the town at some point during the day to inform them of the mock disaster which has just struck the town, and local responders must spring to action, just as if a real catastrophe was taking place.

"That'll be a good test," Pratt said.

To offer volunteer services during an emergency, please contact the board of selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105 with your name and contact information and someone from the emergency management office will get back to you. Deputy emergency management director Glenn Pratt will be discussing emergency preparedness at the next selectmen's meeting, Tuesday, Sept. 20.

Family with local roots finds refuge here

Attorney General's office, has been called back to New Orleans to help sort out the issues which have surfaced regarding law and order.

Many generations of Collette's family have lived in Louisiana. Her mother is from New Orleans and her father grew up south of the city. With her long history in the area, Collette said this is the first time she has ever left due to an approaching hurricane.

She said she and Steve left with their children Christopher, Noelle, and Cadie, as well as the family dog Loki, at 5:50 a.m. Sunday, Aug. 28 before the hurricane hit.

"We expected to be in Jackson for three days and head back. That's what we packed for," she said. While the hurricane hit Jackson as well, it was a "less powerful blow" and the family was able to ride out the storm.

Electricity was lost in Mississippi but the day after the hurricane hit, it became evident the Higginsons could not return home because breaches in the levees caused severe flooding in downtown New Orleans. Fortunately for the Higginsons, their home received minimal flood damage and all water there has since subsided.

Collette explained their home is located near the Mississippi River, just down the road from Tulane University where she is the university architect and director of campus planning. Their neighborhood and the surrounding area is where all the oldest homes in the city are located. As former city planner for New Orleans, she said when the state was first settled, people built near the river because that was the highest ground.

"The closer to the river you are, the higher up you are," she said.

She explained her house is habitable from a constructional standpoint but now has no running water or electricity.

"It's just a structure at this point, waiting to be reconnected. It's just a shell with our possessions in it," she said.

Collette said she has been told it will take anywhere from 24 to 80 days to pump all the water out of the city.

"You have to have a certain amount of electricity available to work the pumps," she said, adding she has been told a new pump dubbed "Big Daddy," was expected to come online this week that may help speed up the draining process.

Once the flood waters are cleared, the process will start of rebuilding the electrical system, including replacing many fallen telephone poles.

Collette said what has happened in New Orleans has been very disorienting for many people for a variety of reasons.

"Some people had never been out of New Orleans by car or bus," she said. "It's a big adjustment," she said for many people who may be leaving home for the first time.

While the Higginsons wait to be given the go-ahead to return to New Orleans, the three children have enrolled in Cohasset schools. Christopher began fourth grade at the Deer Hill School Tuesday, while twins Noelle and Cadie began second grade at the Osgood School.

"The schools, the teachers, the principals, have been absolutely wonderful," Collette said.

The children have been adjusting well to life in Cohasset, and Collette said many of the friends they made at swimming or sailing classes while visiting this summer were happy to see them back in the classroom.

"Our summer friends will be our school year friends as well," she said.

Collette and her family are extremely appreciative of all the support the community has given to them, and said during this time of adjustment, the town has really made them feel welcome.

"We feel incredibly grateful to this community," she said.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Exodus to uncertainty

The images are too much to comprehend.

Bodies bloating in turgid water.

A man sitting on a doorstep of a house surrounded by water contaminated by human waste.

Holes clawed through roofs by people strong enough to escape flood waters rising in the attic.

Numbers on the sides of homes with the number of dead inside.

Homes crushed into splinters.

Thousands of people stranded in fetid, lawless evacuation centers with little food or water.

A disaster scene nearly as large in area as Great Britain.

Katrina, a Category 4 hurricane when it hit land, lashed into the Gulf Coast, tearing apart the levee protecting New Orleans, spewing destructive waves into the densely populated bowl of land.

The cost of the storm that triggered such devastation cannot be calculated — the cost in lives, in homes destroyed, in anguish, in tears.

How could this have happened? If officials knew the levee could withstand only a Category 3 hurricane, why wasn't the levee reinforced years earlier? Why did it take so long to get food and water to evacuees trapped in sweltering shelters? Could the federal government have moved more swiftly and decisively to confront the tragedy and begin to relive the suffering? Why weren't the city and state governments of Louisiana better prepared?

These are troubling questions that will be sorted out over time.

Now the focus of energy needs to be on helping the people displaced by the storm and in the cleanup and rebuilding of the Gulf Coast that includes Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama.

As the waters are drained from New Orleans, it is feared that workers will be confronted by the dead bodies and be exposed to possible disease from the stagnant waters.

The Red Cross reports caring for 142,000 evacuees in 487 shelters in 12 states.

There are 500,000 evacuees, including at least 160,000 children.

Where will these people go?

For many of them, they can never return home.

They are uprooted, the poorest of the poor, pulled hundreds of miles away from what they used to call home.

They face an uncertain future.

May we remember their agony in our prayers.

May we all unite to do whatever we can to help build a future for our fellow Americans in dire need.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Schools' warm welcome appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

We would like to express our great appreciation to everyone who has made the arrival here of our three grandchildren from New Orleans so positive. From our first inquiry when it became obvious that the situation there was dire, through their starting school at Deer Hill and Osgood (Tuesday), we have had wonderful advice and encouragement: first, from Selectman Rob Spofford and his wife Susan; and then from Superintendent Denise Walsh and Principals Keith Gauley and Janet Sheehan and their assistants and teachers.

Because Charlie was in the Foreign Service, and we were either overseas or with the State Department in Washington all during our sons' school years, we never had the opportunity to know Cohasset schools at first hand. It is all the more gratifying now, at this difficult moment, to find how extremely responsive and welcoming they are.

Cohasset is rightly very proud of its school system, and, again, we thank all those responsible for opening the doors so quickly, and extending such a warm welcome to young students whose school in New Orleans is closed indefinitely.

'Our Town' embarks on second season

TO THE EDITOR:

As Our Town, Cohasset's very own cable TV show, enters its second season, I would like, on behalf of our cast and crew, to thank all our many viewers for watching our show and supporting our efforts. We have had a great first season. We have heard from many that they both enjoy the show and find it helpful in understanding issues as well as knowing what's going on around Cohasset.

We have also heard frustration from viewers who tune in only to find the show not running in its scheduled time slot. As I, the executive producer, continue to stress to Comcast the popularity of the show and viewers desire to see it air at the expected times, it would be helpful, and probably more effective, if viewers called Comcast themselves to express their concerns.

If you are interested, calls can be directed toward Comcast Access Coordinator, Evelyn Burke who can be reached at 781-659-1235 ext. 1010. Let Evelyn know you are watching Our Town and that you would appreciate it being offered in its expected time slot. Comcast has committed to airing the show regularly at 9p.m. on Mondays, 9:30 p.m. on Tuesdays and 8:30p.m. on Thursdays all on Comcast channel 10 .

We kick off our new second season with a brand new show on Thursday, Sept. 15 at 8:30pm. This edition will provide an opportunity to viewers to get to know Cohasset High School's new Principal Joel Antolini and new Middle School Vice Principal Beth Strenala.

On Thursday, Sept 29, we will begin airing our second show of the season with guest Al Moore, chairman of the Cohasset Planning Board, who will discuss current issues confronting his board. Look for the details of all other future shows in the Cohasset Mariner thanks to the tremendous support of Mary Ford.

Please feel free, as always, to contact us by calling me at 383-3279 or e-mailing us at Ourtown@theclickstudio.com. We are very interested in your thoughts, areas of interest and concern. Thanks again Cohasset for watching and as we always say, stay tuned and stay informed.

CMI appreciates all the support for roundabout

TO THE EDITOR:

CMI had a great day off Bassing Beach when we held our (mostly) annual Minot Light Roundabout on Sunday, Aug. 21. Competitors came from as far away as New York and Connecticut and a new club, the Vineyard Voyagers, raced their newly built six-oared pilot gig in their first ever event. We had an enthusiastic and spirited bunch and a wonderful time was had by all.

We could never have staged such a successful event without broad and deep community support and we would like to acknowledge everyone who helped us.

First and foremost, we thank South Shore Playhouse Associates for their continuing (and generous) support for CMI.

Seven civic minded shops and stores provided refreshments for our racers and we thank them. They are: Atlantic Bagel, French Memories, Goodfellas, Pizza Zone, Shaw's, The Silver Spoon, and Stop and Shop.

Cohasset Yacht Club graciously lent us one of their safety boats and racing buoys and we could not have conducted the race without the able assistance of Bill Bradford from Hull Yacht Club and Cohasset's Harbor Master, John Munsey.

To all of these wonderful people and businesses, we say THANK YOU.

League supports change in absentee voting law

TO THE EDITOR:

The League of Women Voters urges state legislators to support the constitutional amendment to lift restrictions on absentee voting which will come before the Constitutional Convention Sept. 14.

Massachusetts' current absentee ballot laws make voting even more difficult for the modern citizen. With young or old dependents keeping us at home and urgent business or personal crisis taking us out of town, difficulty getting time off from work, so many voters report an inability to get to the polls despite their good intentions.

Why do we make the voting process cumbersome when we are striving for increased citizen participation in the electoral process and bemoan low voter turnout as a sign of civic apathy and disengagement? Voting is the key to a strong, functional representative democracy that is responsive and accountable to the people.

Currently, the Massachusetts Constitution restricts absentee voting to people who will be absent from their city or town on Election Day; have a physical disability that prevents them from voting at the polling place; or cannot vote due to religious beliefs. Yet, in Election 2004 there were a record number of requests for absentee ballots in Massachusetts. The current law is unenforceable.

Twenty-four states have unconditional absentee voting, allowing everyone who needs to cast their vote by absentee ballot to do so. Research indicates that voters in those states appreciate the flexibility absentee voting affords them; that Election Day workload decreased; and that no fraud was reported as a result.

Unconditional absentee voting does not mean a vote-by-mail election or changes in absentee voting procedures. People would still have to request an absentee ballot in writing and either vote in person at their local election office or by mail. This may necessitate increased resources for local election offices to handle absentee ballots but isn't this a price worth paying for an inclusive democracy?

Electrified trains could be in our future

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

It's been a while since we have written for these pages. The Mariner has done a good job of supplanting our stories with pictures and information about the two major areas currently under construction for the Greenbush in Cohasset.

Most are now aware of the closing of Beechwood Street for railroad crossing construction. We expect that this will be completed in two to three more weeks. While the MBTA is constructing this crossing they are doing some additional work for the Town, at our expense.

On the South Main Street side of the crossing, there is a 30-inch culvert pipe that crosses Beechwood Street and carries storm water from the street drains to the adjacent wetland. A recent survey of this pipe by the Cohasset DPW showed that the pipe was partially collapsed and had created a sink hole in the street as dirt from under the pavement of Beechwood Street was being washed away. Since the MBTA has this whole section of roadway torn up, it just made sense to have them replace this pipe while they were there with all of the necessary personnel and equipment.

The other major area of construction is the Rocky Lane Bridge. This bridge, located four houses to the south of the present Rocky Lane / North Main Street intersection, will be the only entrance into the Rocky Lane sub-division when it is finished. The forms for the concrete are now in place for the abutment that will be constructed on the North Main Street side of the tracks. As you drive by, one can get an appreciation for the height of the new bridge. Remember, the train will be in excess of 16 feet high and it must be able to pass under the bridge with ample clearance.

In fact, there will be a bit more than "ample" clearance. A little known fact is that the entire Greenbush line is being designed to accommodate electrified trains, if and when they are ever used. So, in addition for the 16-foot high locomotives, the system is being designed to accommodate the catenaries (the assembly on top of the engines that contact overhead electric wires) necessary for electrification as well as space for wire supports and the overhead wires. Since the Greenbush system uses the same trackage from Braintree to Boston as all the other Old Colony lines, all lines must be switched to electrified service at one time, so for now the Greenbush will use diesel locomotives like the other two lines.

A little known fact is that the entire Greenbush line is being designed to accommodate electrified trains, if and when they are ever used.

What's next for Cohasset? Well, the MBTA has told us that no two adjacent streets will be closed for crossing construction at one time. We also know that Pond Street / Spring Street is the next crossing on the construction list. If you are familiar with this area, you know that there is a lot of ledge that must be removed for the rerouting of Pond Street and reshaping the whole intersection. We have received some comments from the MBTA that they might start some of the ledge removal before the Beechwood work is complete. However, this does not violate their promise to not close two adjacent streets, since the ledge removal is out of the way and does not require closing either Pond St. or Spring Street. This will also give them a jump on the construction of Pond / Spring streets while the weather is still favorable.

In another vein, we have been informed that the Water Department will be replacing a water Main on Pond Street starting at Lantern Lane and progressing to the high school. So, there will be a bit more construction in this area, not connected to the MBTA project.

This is out first article since school is back in session. As the children go to and from school, either by driving, walking or school bus, we caution all to be careful about the construction projects. Children should be cautioned by their parents to stay away from construction sites. Drivers should be very careful since over the fall and winter months the detours will only become more numerous and will vary as construction progresses. Some of the detours will, of necessity, wind their way along some very congested narrow neighborhood roads that were never designed as through roadways. Caution must be the by-word for all.

While we are talking about safety, there are some areas with safety issues that may not be so obvious. For example, the MBTA has spread gravel on the railroad land at each crossing site. At Pond and Spring streets this gravel is constantly being kicked out into Spring Street by passing vehicles as well as vehicles using the gravel area as a turn around. This gravel presents a rather slippery and dangerous surface to walkers on Spring Street in front of the three buildings facing this section of Spring St. We have also seen tire skid marks in the same area, so pedestrians are not the only ones at risk. So, please be careful.

HEALTH NOTES

Storms play a factor in polluting local waters

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Anyone who read the weather maps as Katrina was developing and coming ashore knew that it was an enormous storm. In fact the storm has had an immediate effect on the entire eastern half of the United States.

Rod Hobson of Deep Run, whose son is an engineer on a tanker filled with jet fuel on the Mississippi, said the ship channel is closed for at least two weeks, but the buoy system has been wiped out, and it may be much longer. They were scheduled to deliver their cargo to Tampa for aircraft scheduled to fly up the East Coast.

Added rainfall from Katrina and other storms may be one factor playing a part in the amount of pollution being swept into local waters this summer.

It's unclear what the local effects of Katrina are, but we know that, owing to a combination of factors, pollution readings have reached historically high levels in Cohasset. We have talked about Parker Avenue cut as having high levels of enterococci (bacterial contamination associated with human septic disposal). Also, according to Jack Buckley of the Center for Student Coastal Research, his students have taken some compelling data. They found that storm-water run off significantly affects bacteria levels in Cohasset Harbor. The day after the storm of Aug. 14 bacteria levels at 8 sites throughout the harbor were "off the charts".

To better understand how bacteria levels interact with tidal changes, students sampled four sites in Cohasset Harbor every two hours from 6a.m.-6p.m., Aug 24. The sites were the inner cove by the tidal gate (site name is James Brook, although the sample is drawn on the harbor side next to the tide gate), the fisherman's dock, the sailing club, and town dock at Parker Avenue. The inner cove suggested that James Brook has a significant impact on the harbor, as counts during low tide (only) at this site were 192 (6a.m.), 591 (8a.m.), and 406 (10a.m.); they dropped throughout the flushing of the harbor with the incoming tide to 87, 53, 31, and 31. Just before Labor Day weekend, Sandy Beach, Sandy Cove, Bassing Beach and the Yacht Club had high readings and were closed. Fortunately, readings became normal just before Labor Day weekend.

Determining the way pollution is washed off our coast into our various waters is a complicated process.

But conditions similar to what we're seeing in our town are occurring up and down the coast. From July 19 to July 21, health advisories were issued at beaches in Lincolnville, Kennebunk, Kennebunkport and South Portland because of high levels of enterococci bacteria. Similarly, New Hampshire officials closed the beach at Seabrook Harbor, the only such closure in New Hampshire all summer. Beaches in the Massachusetts towns of Cohasset, Scituate, Duxbury, Marshfield, Hull and Quincy also were closed at the time.

Usually, beach closures occur after heavy rains, which wash sewage and polluted runoff into the ocean, but other factors can affect the distribution of high bacteria counts. Studies have found that bacteria can multiply and live much longer on sand and dead vegetation than they can in saltwater, according to Michael Shiaris, a biology professor at the University of Massachusetts.

"High (spring) tides can wash them out," said Shiaris, who studies the ecology of bacteria in coastal water and sediment. That appears to be what happened during the July Spring tide in Duxbury, where a high bacteria count was found at a beach that is surrounded by a salt marsh, said Jennifer Dalrymple, the town's health agent. The other town beaches are not near marshes, she said, and weren't affected. Esperanza Stancioff of the Maine Healthy Beaches program has said this spring's heavy rains and the resulting high water table may have caused unusually high levels of fecal matter to enter the marshes. Stancioff said some Maine beaches have on-going pollution issues that can threaten water quality. According to some scientists, spring (full moon) tides may cause flushing and high pollution levels

Determining the way pollution is washed off our coast into our various waters is a complicated process. It may be that a collection of events; high water levels from a wet spring, spring tides flushing more bacteria from wetlands, and perhaps other illicit sources have caused Cohasset's pollution woes. However, we recognize the problems and are doing what we can to solve them.

Nedrow requests Cook vote reconsideration

During the public comment portion of the Sept. 6 board of selectmen's meeting, chairman of the senior housing committee Joe Nedrow asked the board to reconsider appointing Deer Hill Partners as the developer to build on the Cook Estate.

Nedrow said it has always been the intent to build affordable rental housing for seniors on the Cook Estate, and Deer Hill's proposal to build 56 units of senior housing, all of which will be for sale, does not meet the needs of the town.

"Lots of citizens spent countless hours developing the master plan," he said, which states surveys taken in town indicate a need and preference for rental housing.

"It (master plan) seems to be totally ignored by your decision (to appoint Deer Hill Partners", he said.

In addition, Nedrow said with the possibility of a lawsuit against the town he feels the board should reconsider its appointment. Cohasset Associates, the company that came in second behind Deer Hill to build on the site, has threatened to sue claiming an unfair bidding process.

Nedrow said he has been receiving calls from seniors who say they want rental housing. He said in many cases, older couples are 70 years old or more, and may be on their second marriage. Many times both spouses have died and couples have remarried for companionship, but have separate families and may not want to co-mingle the assets. Having rental property allows couples to keep things more separate.

"We'd like you to reconsider," he said.

Poker as a sport?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I was surfing through the sports channels the other evening, searching for an early season football fix, when I came across a couple of guys glaring at each other over what appeared to be a stack of chips and a deck of cards.

I could have sworn they were playing poker but this was ESPN, a major sports channel, and who wants to watch two guys play poker in prime time with the baseball season in full swing and the football season about to get underway?

The last time I played poker for real money was in a Quonset hut in Kingston, N. C. in 1944.

Only when one card was dealt face up and the apparent loser, a fellow named Bill Blanda, walked away with his $51,000 in prize money did I realize I had been watching the No Limit Texas Hold 'Em world championship from Las Vegas.

The next generation in our family tried to explain the subtle nuances of Texas Hold 'Em to me, who got most of my knowledge of poker from a 1933 edition of Hoyle's. I got the "dealer" part all right but the "flop" and the "river" busted me.

The last time I played poker for real money was in a Quonset hut in Kingston, N. C. in 1944. I don't remember the exact date but it must have been around the first of the month because most of my $75 pay check was riding on an all red hand.

Unfortunately, another guy had an all-black hand of higher denomination so I had a month to wait for another $75. My uncle paid for my food and shelter but the guy who made the clear liquid for me back in the hills demanded money so it was a dry month.

But I digress ...

I am told by the next generation that poker — if Texas Hold 'Em can be called that — is the coming craze among those who have nothing better to do. You know, the same people that collected "pet rocks" like Mae West collected diamonds.

"Poker has the feeling of a sport but you don't have to do push-ups," says Penn Jillette, co-author with Mickey Lynn of "How to Cheat Your Friends at Poker: The Wisdom of Dickie Richmond."

Don't be surprised if "How I Raised, Folded, Bluffed, Flirted, Cursed and Won Millions at the World Series of Poker," by Annie Duke, is high on the New York Times best-seller list by Christmastime.

The Boston Herald is even starting a weekly Sunday feature, "The Final Table," by Bernard Lee of Wayland, who won $400,000 by finishing 13th out of 5,619 players in the 2005 World Series of Poker.

Texas Hold 'Em is on the Internet, too, the supreme 21st century test of popularity. Lee, we are told, likes to warm up by playing poker on-line at pokerstars.com, which experienced 21,165 hits on a recent weekday afternoon.

Me, I'll stick with the poker games of long ago, five-card stud, draw and the coed game in which articles of clothing serve the same purpose as chips. Now there a game that would really draw them to the sports channels.

Our Town to start new season

Our Town kicks off its second season with a brand new show on Thursday, Sept. 15 at 8:30pm. This edition will provide an opportunity to viewers to get to know Cohasset High School's new Principal Joel Antolini and new Middle School Vice Principal Beth Strenala.

On Thursday, Sept 29, co-hosts Mark DeGiacomo and Pat Martin sit down with guest Al Moore, chairman of the Cohasset Planning Board, who will discuss current issues confronting his board.

Look for the details of all other future shows in the Cohasset Mariner.

Catch Our Town on Mondays at 9p.m. or Tuesdays at 9:30p.m. and Thursdays at 8:30p.m. on Comcast Channel 10. Stay tuned Cohasset and stay informed!

Viewers can email Our Town at: Ourtown@theclickstudio.com.

Cohasset was once the hub of the antenna universe

By John Seavey
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Do you remember the times when the Red Sox games in New York had to be read by an announcer on WHDH from a ticker tape because the telephone lines carrying the play-by-play were down?

Remember when you had to send a Western Union telegram to communicate with someone overseas and when a long distance overseas telephone call was a special, expensive event?

Contrast this not-too-long-ago picture with today when we get instant worldwide news via CNN, satellite pagers to message anyone around the world, global electronic financial transactions, terrific TV pictures from outer space showing our weather patterns and a whole universe of possibilities for person-to-person dialogue via the Internet.

Amazing changes begin to take place!

A series of companies in Cohasset have contributed to this change in a remarkable way and over a long period of time by providing the microwave antenna backbones needed by these communications networks. These companies have enriched the lives of South Shore folks by providing employment, high technology facilities and new research and manufacturing plants. This industry has also hosted thousands of international visitors, scientists, managers and business people over the years who have come to think of Cohasset as the "Hub of the Antenna Universe".

This history tells only part of the story. The reader will find that if they mentions this subject to the older Cohasset person, chances are that he or she will know someone who has worked on antenna projects right here in Cohasset and will remember even more details. Where were the plants? First, the old grain mill at 432 South Main St. Then the newly industrially zoned property on Cohasset's Whitney Hill (also known as Scituate Hill & proposed location for a large apartment complex) and lastly the great "GSA" building at the Hingham Shipyard.

Didn't realize all this? Read on there's more...

D. S. Kennedy background

Volumes 2 and 3 of the History of Cohasset mentioned the story of the D.S Kennedy Company. D.S. Kennedy was the largest antenna manufacturer in the world in the late 1950's. Founded by a team of local entrepreneurs, Donald S. Kennedy, Warren S. Pratt and Gilman B. Wilder, they built up a substantial enterprise which attracted major customers such as General Electric, ITT, Raytheon and General Dynamics.

What was not told in Volume 2 and was the interesting link between Francis W. Hagerty's "Cohasset Colonials" furniture kit firm and his employee, Donald Kennedy. Mr. Hagerty had been contacted by the scientists at the Radiation Laboratory at MIT during the War. Hagerty's cold-molded plywood process for fabricating small boats had caught their interest. The "Rad Lab" was developing new radar systems together with the British at their Cavendish Labs. This story of this partnership is a wonderful episode in the history of technology. The inquiring reader will be able to find many books on this subject which recreate these times.

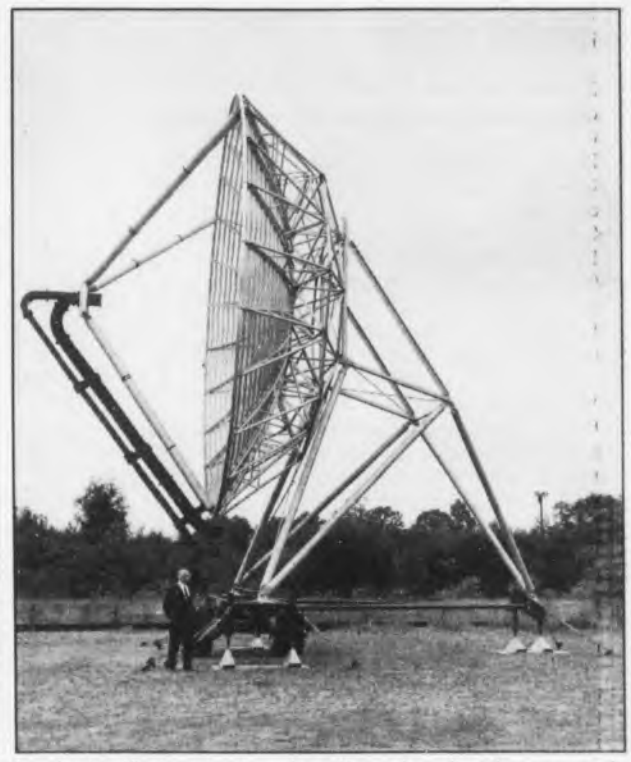
The Rad Lab folks had the problem of making a "radome" or antenna cover to protect the dish antenna which was to be mounted in the nose of bomber aircraft. This dish was part of the radar system which guided the aircraft and warned against other attacking aircraft. The radome had to be specially shaped like a large tapered "bullet". Mr. Hagerty was approached to build the radome over a mold using plywood which had been carefully treated so that it would pass the radar signals. And this worked! After this, Mr. Hagerty got orders for more radomes and later, the dishes themselves. Later on, the plywood was replaced by fiberglass laminate, a relatively new material which was superior to plywood.

After the War, Mr. Hagerty wanted to build kit furniture and not radomes and antennas. Mr. Kennedy saw a good business opportunity and formed his own firm in 1947 at the old grain mill at 432 South Main Street. This mill building long outlived its usefulness and it was razed in 1998 and replaced with condominiums after it fell into disrepair.

The Cold War

D.S. Kennedy antenna products were used at the start of the Cold War period to warn against aircraft and missile attacks. Many products provided satellite and tropospheric communications links and formed the electronic surveillance infrastructure to protect America's security during this difficult time. The Distant Early Warning (DEW) lines across northern Canada used Kennedy antennas. To accommodate company growth, the Company built the 102,000 square foot manufacturing plant in the newly industrially zoned property on Cohasset's Whitney Hill.

The observant reader will note that the plant was called the Whitney Hill plant and not the Scituate Hill plant. The U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey Topographic maps name this natural drumlin "Scituate Hill". The Whitney Hill name came from the surrounding Whitney Woods.



Over the years the company provided employment for more than 1,200 local engineers, welders, machinists, technicians and office employees. Many metal workers went to work for D.S. Kennedy when their Quincy Shipyard employment ran out. The shipbuilding skills which they had learned were readily transferred to building large metal "dish" antennas and their motorized positioners.

When D.S. Kennedy received a large order from General Electric for huge radar antennas for Thule, Greenland, the Company leased the great "GSA" building at the Hingham Shipyard. This building had been constructed during the War years to build large quantities of LSTs. Cohasset's Samuel Wakeman supervised this shipyard. Today, the building still stands, the largest building on the South Shore. A memorial has been placed in front of the present commuter boat terminal; it recites the tremendous accomplishments of Mr. Wakeman's team which greatly contributed to the ending of the Second World War. D.S. Kennedy fabricated all of the heavy steel components for the large Thule radar structures and shipped them by ocean barge from Hingham.

At the time, freight trains serviced the South Shore using the Old Colony Railroad. Today, this railroad is being rebuilt by the MBTA for commuters. Until it went out of business in 1959, the Old Colony transported thousands of folks into Boston. It also hauled freight. Freight spurs were built across the street from the 432 South Main St. plant to haul materials for Kennedy. Today, this suburban neighborhood seems an unlikely place for such industrial activity. There were freight spurs in Hingham nearby the present Hingham Lumber Company and, of course, at the Hingham Shipyard.

D.S. Kennedy pioneered in the design and construction of the very first commercial radio astronomy antenna systems. Scientists of that time traveled to Cohasset to consult with Kennedy engineers and to test their final designs.

As graceful as a delicate instrument yet bold enough to inspire profound scientific imagination, these Kennedy radio telescopes probe the vast reaches of the Milky Way and other galaxies. The Kennedy antennas went from an item you could carry around to one that had a dish size of 84 feet in diameter and could handle a 120 mile wind while holding its needed tolerances.

Today, D.S. Kennedy's great radar antennas still stand in Thule, the Aleutians and England. In this post Cold War period, their continuing function is being debated. The late 1950's also were a time when scientists started to explore the origins of the universe using Radio Astronomy technology. D.S. Kennedy pioneered in the design and construction of the very first commercial radio astronomy antenna systems. Scientists of that time traveled to Cohasset to consult with Kennedy engineers and to test their final designs.

When the Russians launched Sputnik to the amazement of the world in 1957, the possibilities of communications using radio systems in orbiting satellites became feasible. Sputnik was equipped with a small transmitter which emitted a series of "beeps" for radio listeners, but two-way communications were possible only later.

Practical two-way satellite communications actually started because of a pioneering development done in 1958 by the Naval Research Laboratory. D.S. Kennedy's products played a key part in this. The Navy was searching for a way to communicate large amounts of data in a secure fashion from its bases around the world.

Navy engineers hit upon the idea of bouncing signals off of the Moon from one naval base and receiving them at another base, possibly thousands of miles away. D.S. Kennedy was contacted. They had developed a standard radio telescope antenna 84 feet in diameter. Calculations showed that a pair of these antennas fed by powerful transmitters could do the job. Kennedy received a major contract to build four antennas and their associated equipment. One pair was installed in Annapolis, Maryland, the other pair in Oahu, Hawaii. This system also worked!

Demonstrations showed that reliable communications could be conducted between these important and far-flung facilities. The only down-side was that the moon had to be visible from both locations, thus limiting communications to only certain times of the day! From these pioneering experiments came many generations of improved two-way communications satellites which today we take for granted. These satellites make it possible to telephone or FAX anywhere in the world at any time. They form a vast network of communications, imaging, security systems, navigation and optical systems which have changed our world forever.

D.S. Kennedy Co. hired many young engineers who then moved to the South Shore. Later, some stayed and worked in the antenna industry. And several formed their own companies. Kennedy also hired many engineers to install products at sites around the world. These Field Service Engineers would often be away for months. Field duty could be hazardous. Returnees told many stories of difficulties abroad (Northern Africa, Western Africa, Australian Outback and the Aleutians to name some). Others found their experience more enticing (Hawaii, Fiji, Diego Garcia). One engineer was away so long that he returned newly married to a native lady!

In 1961 about half of the engineers and managers at D.S. Kennedy quit to form their own antenna company, Antenna Systems, Inc. ASI rented space at the Hingham shipyard and in 1963 moved to facilities at Grenier Field, Manchester, NH.

Due to the increased competition, D. S. Kennedy suffered financial difficulties and was eventually purchased by Anchor Metals in Anniston, Alabama who in turn sold it to Electronic Specialties, Inc. in Chatsworth, California. D. S. Kennedy operations were terminated in Cohasset in 1963 and the large Whitney Hill plant was closed.. This closing was an emotional event for the employees, who knew that they had contributed greatly to their country's Cold War effort. A well-attended reunion was held by former Kennedy employees at the Cliff House, Minot Beach in 1968. Today, old timers still remember this period with fond memories.

Time moved on

Antenna activity in Cohasset did not stop with the closing of D.S. Kennedy. Former Kennedy employees, Thomas Walsh of Marshfield and James Hayes of Scituate joined with Albert Fowler of Scituate and formed a small antenna company in 1971. They hired local former Kennedy shop personnel and, using their business and engineering skills, started RF Systems, Inc. in Holbrook. Later, they moved into the rear of the former Kennedy plant. RF Systems produced large dish antennas, satellite communications terminals, radar dishes for Raytheon and had a line of commercial communications antenna products.

RF Systems expanded their operations and built a new plant

Artifacts sought for DSK collection

By Hal Coughlin
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Over the years 1,200 people were employed by DSK.... But many today still think about the company's history and many have passed on. So what some of us are planning to do is attempt to obtain as much as possible in the way of artifacts, individuals histories stories, photographs, trade magazines, blueprints, from those that still remember this great technical history of Cohasset. With this in mind we're asking any ex-DSK employees, friends and relatives to search through the attics and cellars for any kind of DSK memorabilia which might be added to the "DSK Collection". Also if you have information and artifacts send these along as well. If you know anyone in any photographs we would like to have their names for the record.

We have had the good fortune that the "DSK Collection" will be housed at the Cohasset Historical Society so others now and in the future can review this material if they wish. We also thank the Cohasset Historical Society for offering this great opportunity for storing the DSK Collection.

We are attempting to finalize the collection by October and placed at the Cohasset Historical Society at the first of the 2006.

Whether your a former DSK employee or whether your a relative or friend of an ex-DSK employee but have some of these handed down items in your family files and want to add them to the new "DSK Collection" they can be sent to Hal Coughlin, 25 Reservoir Road, Cohasset, MA 02025.

We are attempting to finalize the collection by October and placed at the Cohasset Historical Society at the first of the 2006. Please pass this word on to others who might have interest in helping with this great history collection!

The Committee wants thank Gil Wilder, the last remaining DSK founder, along with Mac Winsor for helping us get this collection started. Also, we want to thank one of our committee John Seavey, of Seavey Engineering Associates, Inc., who has spent many hours pulling this history together for your review. We're hoping the residents of Cohasset, Scituate, Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Norwell and many other towns for any memorabilia they might be able to provide so this great story can go down in history.

Thank you, in advance, for any of these items which will be added to the collection along with the submitters name if you wish. Please pass on this information to anyone that be able to help the mission.

Once hub of antenna universe

in St. Cloud, Fla. in 1975. In 1976 they were sold to Comtech Systems, Inc. on Long Island, operations were moved and the Cohasset facility was closed. In Florida they operated as Comtech Antenna Systems, Inc. and the president was a former Cohasset resident also a former Kennedy and ASI employee Glenn Higgins who retired in 1999. This spin-off from Kennedys is in it's 42 year of operation!

In 1977, Mr. Hayes and Mr. Walsh established their own firm, H & W Industries, Inc. This was also located in the former Kennedy plant. Meanwhile, the main Kennedy plant had been purchased by Norfolk Conveyor, Inc. This company produced customized material conveyor systems for manufacturing plants. They were a large employer and manufacturer on Whitney Hill.

H & W Industries continued the antenna tradition, manufacturing dish antennas and employing local antenna artisans. In 1997 the owners sold their company to Atlantic Microwave in Bolton, Mass. where this antenna business continues.

One of the young engineers who started his employment with D.S. Kennedy continues this antenna tradition today. John M. Seavey of Cohasset became interested in the antenna field as a young man and decided that this was to be his career. He joined D.S. Kennedy in 1956 as a summer employee, received his degree in physics from MIT in 1958 and remained at Kennedy until 1963 when the plant closed. Leaving for other employment in the antenna field, he became an antenna consultant in 1976.

He started Seavey Engineering Associates, Inc. in 1981. Presently his company has facilities in Cohasset and Pembroke and employees 65 engineers, technicians and manufacturing personnel. He has lived on Beechwood Street all of this time.

Some of the modern antenna developments to which Mr. Seavey's company has contributed are:

- "Speedpass" terminals on Mobile gas pumps
- Satellite Radio systems for automobiles
- Global Positioning (GPS) equipment
- Cellular and PCS tele- phones
- Satellite TV rooftop "dishes"
- Tracking systems for UPSand FedEx delivery trucks
- Mars Lander telemetry systems
- Space Shuttle communications
- Space Imagery equipment (weather satellites)

All with a large international client base.

During this period innumerable visitors have come to the small town of Cohasset on "antenna business" These have been scientists, engineers, managers, salesperson, accountants and many others. There have been folks from industry, the military and civilian government employees as well as many international visitors.

Invariably, visitors have expressed pleasure at the idea of a high-tech activity like the antenna and microwave business being conducted from a small sea-side town. They have been charmed by the beauty and down-home flavor of the community. Many times when they have toured Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue they say that they would like to live here.

Many people are unaware of this story. They may travel along Route 3A and not realize that an enterprise such as this existed in Cohasset and over this time period employed over 1200 people. They may associate high tech with industrial parks in Burlington, Waltham, Woburn, but not in Cohasset.

Make Big Money from Boston's Red Hot Housing Market... and Start Living the Lifestyle of Your Dreams

Robert Allen's legendary workshop reveals how to change your financial future in 90 days or less

With low interest rates and this state's soaring appreciation, now is the time you could be my next real estate millionaire — perhaps even a multimillionaire. Even if you're stone cold broke right now, you can still become richer than most Americans will ever be. And before you even realize it, you could be living the life you've always wanted... the life you and your family deserve.

Years ago, when I invented the now world-famous "Nothing Down" real estate system, people thought it simply couldn't be done... Buying real estate without investing a dime of your own money! But, I have proven it can be done, year after year, in all kinds of housing markets. And now the housing market in your very own neighborhood makes this one of the best times ever to put my strategies to work for you.

Perhaps you've seen me on TV — or perhaps you've read one of my bestselling books. I've shown tens of thousand that just about anyone can make a fortune in real estate. But I have to tell you, in all my years of showing people how to create wealth through real estate, I believe it's never been as easy as it is today. Plus, I believe you can make more money now in real estate than ever before. And you can do it quicker.

The profit floodgates have truly opened for so many of my students. I believe you too can take advantage of all the lasting wealth that real estate can provide. And I'd like to tell you how in my updated workshop, Creating Wealth with Real Estate.

SAN FRANCISCO

Challenge #1: Find fast wealth in any city, town, or neighborhood

When I first developed my revolutionary system for buying real estate, I very publicly challenged the media to... "Send me to any city in America. Take away my wallet. Give me $100 for living expenses. In 72 hours, I'll buy an excellent piece of property, using none of my own money." Keep in mind, I would have no cash to invest. No connections. No firsthand knowledge of the real estate market where I was going. But I would have my new system for buying real estate. And that meant none of the above mattered.

DONE

I didn't buy just one property. I bought four!

The Los Angeles Times took me up on my gutsy challenge. In just 57 hours, I had taken title to not one, but to four properties — adding $722,000 in assets to my real estate portfolio. That's the equivalent of more than $10,000 an hour.

ST. LOUIS

Challenge #2: Take someone from unemployed to over $100,000 in equity

No better example of "ANYBODY CAN DO THIS" exists than when I made another major public challenge. As you might be able to guess, I'm not shy about telling others how my system works. So I declared..."Send me to any unemployment line in America. Let me select someone that is broke, out of work, and discouraged. In two days time, I'll teach my strategies for Creating Wealth. In 90 days, that person will be back on his/her feet with $5,000 in the bank."

DONE

It was in St. Louis, Missouri, where I pulled a couple out of the unemployment line and placed them on the path to wealth. Within 90 days, these first-timers earned more than $5,000 in cash. But that was just the beginning... Within the next 12 months, they garnered more than $100,000. It changed their lives forever. Think of how an extra $100,000 or more could change your life and improve your family's future. What dreams have you put aside that $100,000 could reawaken?

NEW YORK

Challenge #3: Prove anyone can do it

I've become famous as America's leading expert on purchasing real estate with no money down. I've been interviewed in newspaper, and on radio and TV. In fact, Regis Philbin challenged me on the spot to prove my system worked for anyone. I selected a young woman right out of Regis' studio audience and guided this first-timer to earning more than $20,000 in 90 days. And now, I'd like to pull you out of your chair and invite you to discover why my powerful and internationally acclaimed Creating Wealth with Real Estate program has been so hugely rewarding for people across the country — and why it can also be your path to substantial wealth.

DONE

Your turn to succeed.

Can you become a millionaire? Dozens of my students have. At the FREE preview of my workshop, you'll see real-life examples of how my powerful wealth creation strategies have helped people jump into making money right away.

Challenge #4: Make you my next millionaire! STARTS NOW!

I've proved time and again that my system can work just about anywhere, anytime, and for just about anyone — even people who are flat broke. Now, I'd like to prove it can work for you.

In fact, my big mouth could make you a millionaire. That's because I've challenged myself to create millionaires all across America. Yup, I went right for the "M" word: millionaire. Raised a few eyebrows with that one. But remember, you don't need money in the bank to buy real estate. You don't even need good credit. All you need is my Creating Wealth with Real Estate system and the personal gumption to go out and apply it.

Now it's your turn to take a step toward real wealth

The wealth is out there. I will show you how it's possible to find it and grab it. Take a life-changing step toward financial independence for yourself and your family today. The road (it's more of a superhighway actually) to millionaire status begins right here. Right now, my goal is to create millionaires all across the country. And I'd like to count you among them. There's no telling when my FREE workshop will be back in your area, because it's simply impossible for me to bring my famous workshop to every city. Grab this unique opportunity to discover hidden wealth opportunities in real estate.

Bring someone you care about

If you have a friend or family member who wants to increase their wealth, bring them to this FREE empowering event. I believe there's never been a better time to invest in real estate. Forecasts call for soaring demand for homes and rising prices. At this free event, you'll see how it's possible to ride this historic trend to personal riches.

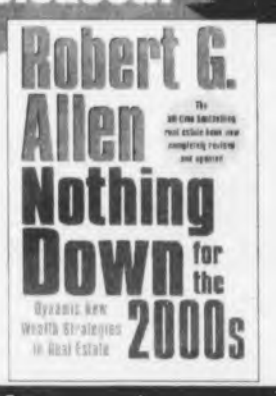
True Stories. True Success.

"Right now, I have a positive cash flow of $2,800 on one property."
— Richard Douglas, New Jersey

"We didn't take anything out of our pocket, and we bought a $250,000 property that gives us a $900 monthly cash flow."
— Guy Burns, Nevada

"I bought two pieces of property and made $25,000 in 90 days. It's so easy to do this stuff, it's amazing."
— Gary Harris, Missouri

"These are proven methods — they work. You can make $25,000 to $35,000 in a matter of 60 days or less."
— Preston Fleming, Illinois



"I just sold my first project; my net profit after all costs was $65,000. I received the check on my 40th birthday."
— Henning Van Deusen-Jensen, California

"Today has been the best day of our real estate careers. We sold our fourth house. This will put our net worth to around $1,000,000."
— John (Chuck) Neuschafer, Georgia

You will discover it's possible to:

- Buy prime real estate without a penny of your own money
- Acquire properties at below market value and put the difference in your pocket
- Profit in unexpected ways from some of the lowest mortgage rates in decades

Hart's hat trick propels CHS girls to victory

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Torey Hart has set the bar pretty high for herself.

In the freshman forward's high school soccer debut Tuesday afternoon, Hart notched a hat trick in Cohasset's 6-2 win over Cape Cod Academy.

Scoring goals has, at times, been a problem for the team over the years, and head coach Deb Beal is hopeful that Tuesday's display is a harbinger for things to come this season.

The coach believes that Hart, one of three freshmen who will see a lot of playing time this year, is the real deal.

"She is a really smart, heads up player who plays a lot of soccer," Beal said. "She's real smooth, smart, and she's in great shape. She just has a good head for the game."

Senior Molly Trahan and juniors Colleen Richardson and Kara Wilcox also scored for the Skippers. For Wilcox, it was her first varsity goal, scored within 30 seconds of her stepping on the field. Richardon's tally came on a perfectly placed free kick from just outside the penalty area, something that may happen with some regularity.

"[Richardson] can place the ball anywhere on the field so easily," Beal said. "She has great skills."

With CCA having no JV team, Beal had all 34 girls in the program on her bench Tuesday - and she used them all.

On a normal basis, Cohasset will carry around 17 players. This year's squad has a fair amount of youth mixed with some seasoned veterans.

This year's senior captains are Katie Bolger and Emilie Shea. Shea is in the striker mix with Hart, Trahan, and juniors Christina Pinkus and Lindsay Durkin. Pinkus and Durkin are the team's leading returning scorers from last year, having tallied five goals apiece to tie for second behind the graduated Casey Anderson.

Bolger will be one of the starting fullbacks (outside defenders) in Cohasset's diamond defense, along with Richardson. Sophomore Anna Haggerty has stepped in to the sweeper role, a position manned last year by Mariner All-Scholastic Christine Lovallo. Beal has been impressed with what Haggerty has done at one of the team's most important positions.

Rounding out the Skippers' starting defense is freshman stopper Sarah Coggins. She, Hart and winger Maggie McGoldrick are the team's three freshmen, and Beal credits their dedication to the game.

Boys score 'huge' win over B-R

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Cohasset boys soccer coach Rob Leary was positively gushing over his Skippers hours after a "total team effort" brought them a 4-2 win at Bridgewater-Raynham on Tuesday.

And the emphasis was on the "team," so much so that he refused to share who scored the goals.

"It was a whole team effort," Leary said. "We had an injury early, so we wound up playing with 15 kids. [B-R] had 16 seniors alone, and 25 kids on the team. Everyone on our side just sucked it up and played."

With a 2-0 lead halfway through the first half, the Skippers had to stand strong against a B-R team that started sending in fresh players in waves, at times subbing five guys at once. Leary says that despite the gap in bodies, his team simply outplayed B-R in the second half, holding a 4-1 lead until B-R scored with seven minutes to go.

The win was an encouraging start for a team that returns three South Shore League All-Stars, a trio of seniors that will also serve as this year's captains.

Two of them are defenders, Sam MacDonald and Trevor Brady. Trevor's younger brother, Danny, a freshman, also started in the back against B-R.

Also figuring into the defender mix this season will be seniors

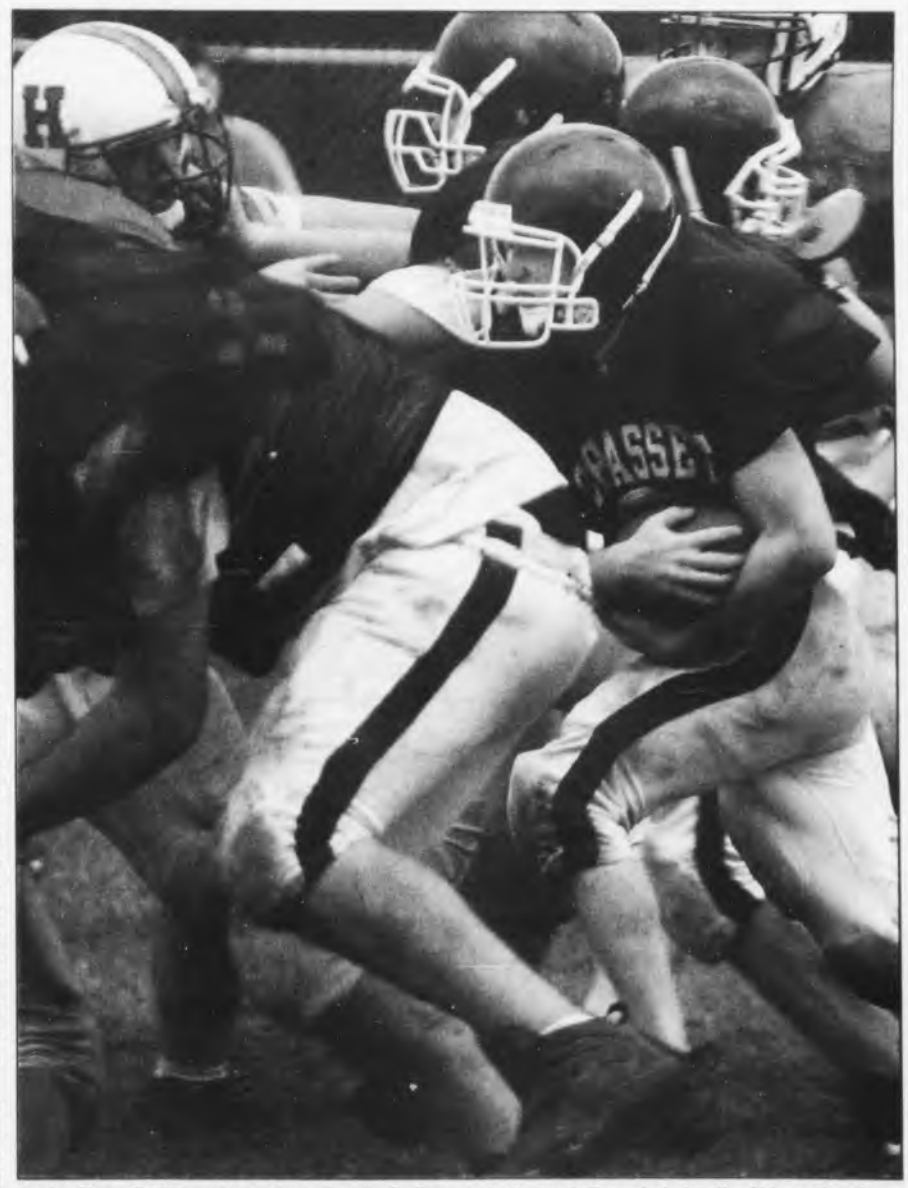
Laying it on the line

Gridders will go as far as their big guys will take them

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

At a recent practice, the Cohasset coaching staff was donning t-shirts that read on the back "10-1; not good enough."

Results wise, the last two years have been very similar for the program. Undefeated regular season, South Shore League championship, trip to the Div. 3 playoffs…season-ending first round loss to Westwood.



If the script is to change, the main reason will be the Skippers' dominant offensive line.

By now, mostly everybody knows the name of senior right guard Nick Arment. "Tiny," as he is affectionately called by his coaches, goes 6-foot-2, 275 pounds and has the skills to match his size. As one of the team's captains, he is without question the leader of the group.

The plus for Cohasset is that Arment is surrounded by four underclassmen with upperclassmen-type experience. To Arment's right is sophomore tackle Jake Cuneo, another huge presence at 6-4, 275. He started every game last year as a freshman, and the Skippers coaching staff expect Cuneo to be the next star of the group.

As if that wasn't enough for opposing defenses to contend with, Cohasset rounds out the strong side with senior tight end Dan McCarthy, a two-year

High hopes for CHS field hockey

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

There is no doubt about it - one can sense a high level of enthusiasm about the 2005 Cohasset field hockey team.

To start, the Skippers showed great improvement from last year in their shooting skills and ball movement during their well-matched preseason scrimmages against Hingham and Scituate.

And for the players? Fourteen returning seniors and eight juniors should provide plenty of field hockey know-how. With such a good turnout though, not everybody can expect varsity playing time.

Head coach Deb Bostwick plans to carry only 17 players per game on her varsity squad. She does plan, however, to swing some underclassmen between JV and varsity depending on what they can offer to the team at the time.

"I feel this year's team will be much better all around than last year's team," remarked Bostwick. "We'll definitely have spots to fill. But I'm confident in our players. We have lots of experience."

Senior Co-captain Katie James also seemed hopeful about Cohasset's play.

"We've come a long way in our offense since last season," she said. "We just need to communicate well with each other."

Looking ahead, the varsity roster still remains unclear. We do know, however, that senior captains Mia Lieb-Lappen, Katherine Whoriskey, Katie James, and Remy Lee will lead the '05 squad. In addition, Bostwick expressed confidence in senior goalie Aaron Bigley.

To supplement Bostwick's college-level playing experience and 17-year coaching knowledge, Cohasset High School graduate Abbey Coakley will fill starter with good size (6-2, 225) for the position.

The left side of the line is also very strong in its own right. The line as a whole is a very athletic group, and junior left tackle Justin Alexander may be the best pure athlete of them all. Also one of the top performers for Cohasset's basketball and spring track teams, Alexander started every game last year and at 6-3 and 230, is another big frame for the backs to run behind.

Rounding out the starting line are juniors Paul St. Pierre and Nick Cambi, who will play left guard and center, respectively. Cambi, also a solid wrestler, started eight games last year and takes over at center for the only graduate from last year's group, Matt Casey.

Head coach Tony Rolfe knows he has a special group up front, and the only thing that will bring them down is an injury.

"For a school our size, this is pretty unusual to have a group like that," Rolfe said. "Of course, we have to stay healthy. When we lost Nicky last year [due to a leg injury in the first quarter of the Thanksgiving game against Hull], we had nobody else to go to."

And for those who think the line is just a bunch of beefy guys pushing people around, Rolfe says there is a lot more to it than that.

"You have to be a pretty smart kid to play there," he said. "Every week, it's a whole different blocking scheme you have to learn. It takes a very disciplined athlete to do that."

Brian Patterson, a CHS grad in his ninth year as an assistant coach with the program, concurs.

"With all the stuff we run, we have to make a lot of calls from the line," he said. "They have to react to what the defense is giving them and know what you're doing to make those calls."

The line will be blocking for an entirely new backfield. Taking over behind center is junior Anthony DiPaolo, described by Rolfe as an athlete with a strong arm and good speed. The coach says he plans to take advantage of that speed and run some plays for DiPaolo to carry the football.

The Skippers have long been a run-oriented team, and that will not change this year. But Rolfe says the passing game may become more of a factor this season.

"Whatever works, that's what we're going to do," said the veteran coach. "Everything is subject to change, based on the team we're playing and the playing conditions.

"But I know we will throw the ball much better this year than we did last year."

Juniors Nick Zappolo and Fletcher Smallzell, along with sophomore Pat Doonan, will be DiPaolo's top targets. At 5-2, Doonan is one of the smallest guys you'll see on the field, but Rolfe has been impressed with what he's seen.

"He doesn't drop any balls, and he is absolutely fearless," he said.

The running game will be led by senior Shane Dorian and sophomore Kyle Pinkus. A state champion wrestler, Dorian has probably the biggest surprise of the preseason.

"He's not real big, but he just sees the field so well," Rolfe said. "He really surprised us because he hasn't played a lot of football before. He has probably come as far as anyone on the team so far."

Pinkus will provide a different look with his size, and he is part of a big 10th grade class who got some good experience last year, which is paying dividends now.

"We had a great freshman class last year, and we had no choice but to take advantage of it this year," Rolfe said.

Another of those sophomores, P.J. McCaw, will start at fullback. Rolfe describes him with three words you always like to hear about a fullback: "big, rugged, tough."

Defensively, many of the same names from the offensive line will form a solid rotation on the front. Arment, Cuneo and Alexander will join senior Scott Wakefield, who played well last year.

Senior Zach Etkind, junior Robert Silvia and sophomore Cliff Musto are also in the mix.

Junior Colin Conway leads the linebacker group, having done a nice job as a starter last year. McCarthy and Pinkus will also start.

Senior captain Dave McKenna and junior Jeff Brown will lead the defensive backfield. After playing mostly corner last season, Brown will play free safety this season and make the pre-play calls for the group. Sophomore Sam DiGiacomo is also a part of the picture.

As for the kicking game, Cohasset is getting some help from across the Atlantic. Senior Robert Murley and his family moved in to town from England, and his rugby experience naturally lends itself to football. At practice, Murley has been punting the ball as far as 55 yards in the air, and is also making extra points and short field goals with consistency.

Cohasset has an intriguing non-league schedule, beginning tomorrow when they host Nantucket. Cohasset-Archbishop Williams has become a great rivalry, and the Skippers will host the Bishops next Friday night. Cardinal Spellman is again on the schedule, and the Skippers have also picked up Scituate, whom they will host Sept. 30.

Good starts for soccer

"They have such a strong work ethic, and I think that comes from playing club soccer," said the coach. "They know what it's like to play competitive soccer year-round."

The defense will be playing in front of what could be a season-long rotation of goalies. Melissa Crowley-Buck, Shalea Daly and Johana Brophy all saw time in net on Tuesday. Beal says Brophy will start the year at JV.

Two athletes, Wilcox and junior Lara Novak, will both see time at the center-mid spot. Starting on the wings will be McGoldrick and junior Emily Coggins (Sarah's older sister), with junior Caren Garber also in the midfield mix.

It was only one game, but Beal was extremely pleased by what she has seen early in the year.

"I've seen them do a lot of good things the last few days," she said. "We were up 5-1 on CCA at the half and I said, 'You know what, let's play some possession soccer.' So we go out there and, right off the kickoff, connect on 13 passes in a row. I've never had a team that could do that."

Cohasset faced a far stronger challenge yesterday against Scituate, a match that will give a better indication of exactly where the Skippers stand at this point. Within the South Shore League, Cohasset will again be challenged by defending league champion Norwell and the always strong Abington.

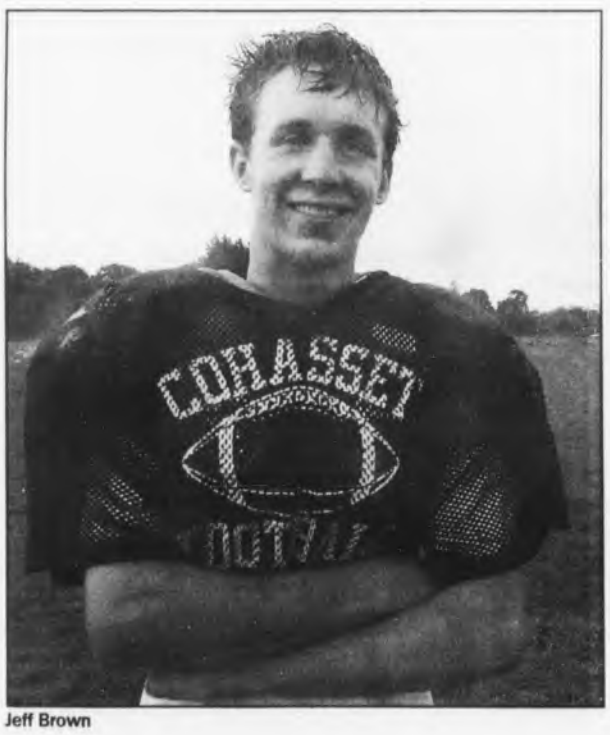
Nathan Needle and Patrick Bertovich, and sophomore Evan Deutsch, who also can step up and play in the midfield.

The Skippers used both a 3-4-3 and 4-4-2 formations against B-R, and either way, the midfield play will be crucial. Returnees at that position with that experience include seniors Brandon Smith and Chris Ofsthun, and junior Chris Donze.



Leary is also excited to have sophomore Sam Roth back in the fold. Roth, who attended a private school last year, has come in to solidify that midfield rotation for Cohasset. Fellow sophomore Emerson Oronte will see time at both midfield and striker.

Forward will be a position of strength for the Skippers, led by the third captain and league all-star, Aidan Buick. As a junior, Buick led the league in scoring with 29 points (15 goals, 14 assists) and also made the Eastern Mass All-Star team.

In net, senior Prescott Busk (perhaps the coolest name this reporter has ever heard) comes back as a starter after a solid junior season.

Leary says the league is the strongest he has seen it in his three years at Cohasset. Harwich, last year's champion, returns most of their key players, as does Mashpee. Leary also expects Norwell, a perennial league power that fell on hard times and missed the state tournament last season, to be back in top form in '05.

In addition to playing B-R twice, Cohasset also has two non-league matches with Scituate and one each with a talented Hanover team and Cardinal Spellman.

Jeff Brown

In the spotlight: Jeff Brown

This season, junior Jeff Brown will start at free safety and essentially run the defensive backfield, making all the pre-play calls.

Not bad for a kid who, before last season, hadn't played the sport since the third grade.

As a sophomore, Brown caught the eye of his coaches and certainly his teammates, who said he was one of the best DB's in the area.

A gifted athlete who is also a standout defender for the CHS lacrosse team, Brown credits his coaches and teammates for his ability to master things as quickly as he has.

"Mr. [Bob] Silvia is a really good coach, and last year we had some really good seniors to teach me things," Brown said after a recent practice. "With people like coach Silvia and coach [Tony] Rolfe, it's easy to learn from them."

Silvia, the defensive coordinator and DB coach - whose nephew, D.J., manned the free safety position last season - says Brown's attitude and natural ability have been key to his emergence.

"Jeff is a great athlete with good speed, and he plays heads up," Silvia said. "He's done a really nice job because he has worked so hard at it.

"He has shown the ability to come up and just put it to people. We were expecting a lot from his last year, and this year will be no different."

the assistant coach position. With a strong coaching staff, hopes are high that another state tournament invitation will surface.

"The coaches are great," said senior Carrie Muir. "Coach Bostwick is very clear in what she wants. She communicates well and really psyches us up before games. She gives us a lot of confidence."

The Skippers opened their season against Norwell yesterday in their first of 16 games. Bostwick expects her team to give the Clippers a good run for their money.

In general, the '05 squad looks fresh and ready to go. They have experience, skills, and a work ethic that can bring success.

"My playing days are over, but I still look forward to every practice and every game because of the players I coach in the town of Cohasset," Bostwick said. "They are very special players with a lot of class and then some. They are like my own kids."

National Boys of Baseball clinics offered in Hingham

Hingham Little League is pleased to announce that it is again hosting the Boys of Baseball Clinics at Haley Field, Hingham on Friday, Sept. 9 and Saturday, Sept. 10.

The clinic on Friday is for parents and coaches from 4:30 p.m. - 7 p.m. with registration at 4 p.m. The cost of this clinic is $35 payable to the Boys of Baseball. Hingham Little League will reimburse any of its coaches for the cost of this clinic upon verification of attendance.

This program, open to residents of all towns, is extremely worthwhile in learning the skills needed to coach and teach baseball fundamentals as well as mental aspects of the game. It also serves as a way for coaches and their assistants to learn helpful hints and strategies for teaching skills, practice organization and ways to create fun, wholesome baseball experiences as well as tips on dealing with the impact of parents and coaches.

Participants should bring gloves and cleats and should be prepared to physically participate in this hands-on learning experience.

The clinic on Saturday, Sept. 10 is a day of instruction and fun for baseball players ages 5-13 from 8:30 a.m. - 4 p.m. with registration at 8 a.m. The cost of this clinic is $85 payable to the Boys of Baseball. Players should bring a glove, cleats, bat and batting helmet (if you have them), water bottle and snacks. Funds will be collected for lunch from the players and lunch will be provided.

In addition to sound instruction and drills and verbal feedback for personal improvement, players may be considered for possible selection to the Boys of Baseball National Travel Teams for participation in various tournaments.

The clinics will be led by Dr. Steve Cosgrove, an extremely knowledgeable coach who, in addition to teaching sound baseball fundamentals, conveys encouragement for success in baseball, the classroom and life. Dr. Cosgrove most recently coached the Boys of Baseball team that won the title at the 2005 National Tournament of Champions Week at Cooperstown Dreams Park, Cooperstown, NY. which is a week designated for only select national teams.

Please check the Hingham Little League Website at www.hinghamlittleleague.org for more information and contact names or in case of significant rain.

SPORTS NOTES

Seadogs tryouts

The first in a series of clinic/tryout sessions for the nationally renown Seadogs/AAU Travel Team Baseball Program's 2006 season will be conducted Sept. 10-11 at fields in Braintree, Norwood and East Bridgewater.

The Seadogs will field seven teams in 2006:10-and-under through and including 16-and-under. Players are selected from a series of clinic/tryouts held throughout this fall. The cut-off day to determine proper age group for 2006 teams is July 31, 2006.

The 2005 Seadogs enjoyed their most successful season, highlighted by the 12-and-Under team's Silver Medal performance in the AAU National Championships.

Nokona steps up to the plate to benefit Curt's pitch for ALS

Nocona Athletic Goods Company, a manufacturer of high-end athletic equipment and accessories for baseball, softball, and football, has teamed-up with WEEI and Curt Schilling to help benefit Curt's Pitch for ALS.

Every Tuesday at 9 a.m., Nokona is proud to sponsor the Curt Schilling interview on WEEI's Dennis & Callahan show. "Tuesday Conversations with Curt Schilling," on WEEI is the only place you can hear Schilling discusses baseball, the Boston Red Sox, ALS, and other current events.

In addition to being a premier sponsor for Schilling's exclusive discussions on WEEI, Nokona recently donated two tickets to WEEI for auction to a sold-out U2 concert at the TD Banknorth Garden. The tickets were auctioned off live on the air by WEEI personalities John Dennis and Gerry Callahan. Steve Biller from Dorchester, MA was the recipient of the tickets with a bid of $6,000 that was donated to Curt's Pitch for ALS. Biller purchased the tickets so that he and his wife, who was nine months pregnant, could enjoy the concert from a comfortable location.

The winners were hosted in a full service luxury suite by WEEI personality John Meterparel and his wife. In addition to the tickets, Biller received two customized Nokona gloves. Nokona also donated a pair of tickets to a meet and greet with Curt Schilling at Fenway Park that netted an additional $1,500 for ALS.

To date Nokona, in cooperation with WEEI and Curt's Pitch, has raised more than $17,500 to help fight ALS.

OBITUARIES

Patrick A. O'Neill

37-year resident of Cohasset

Patrick A. "Eric" O'Neill, 80, of Cohasset died Aug. 30, 2005, at home following a lengthy illness.

Born in Limerick, Ireland, son of the late Thomas and Kathleen (Kenny) O'Neill, he attended the Christian Brothers School and Crescent College, S.J. there. He graduated with honors from University College Cork (Ireland) with a bachelor's degree in engineering.

Mr. O'Neill worked for a couple of years as an engineer in Ireland and England prior to immigrating to the U.S. in 1950.

In the U.S. he was employed by the Franki Foundation Company, where he worked as a professional engineer, originally in New York and then in Massachusetts. Elected president of the company in 1963, he grew Franki to nationwide presence over the following 21 years with work in 40 states. He successfully installed the Pressure Injected Footing as a standard foundation element in Boston and the U.S.

In 1985, Mr. O'Neill was knighted by King Baudoin of Belgium for the quality of his work.

Also in 1985, he acquired the New England Foundation Co. Inc. and within the first year NEFCO introduced the end-bearing slurry caisson to New England. This was used so widely on the Central Artery's Big Dig project that it is now established as the high capacity foundation of choice for the Boston area. In 2001 he was presented with the Martin S. Kapp Foundation Engineering Award by the American Society of Civil Engineers. Further honors included Honorary Membership in the Boston Society of Civil Engineers in 2005 and the Lifetime Achievement Award from the Foundation and Marine Contractors Association of New England, also in 2005. With his backing, other projects among many in NEFCO's repertoire included the slurry wall at Children's Hospital Research Building and supports for Fenway Park's Green Monster.

He actively participated in engineering and contracting associations, including the Moles,' the Deep Foundation Institute, the ADSC-

Patrick A. O'Neill

International Association of Foundation Drilling and the Geotechnical Advisory Committee to the Massachusetts State Building Code. He was president of the Foundation and Marine Contractors Association for many years.

His cultural activities included acting as director of the Eire Society of Boston and serving as president for two years. His portrait will be a part of the Art Exhibition of Boston's notable Irish Americans to take place at Boston College and will become part of B.C.'s archives.

He leaves his wife, Patricia E. Grogan O'Neill; three daughters, Sheila O'Neill-Hannon of Marlton, N.J., Deirdre A. O'Neill of Cambridge and Peggy O'Neill McNamara; a son, Brian P. O'Neill of Brookline; a sister, Kitty Sherry of Dublin, Ireland; a brother, Hubert O'Neill of Tolland Conn.; seven grandchildren, Kathleen, Kevin, Maeve and Michael Hannon, Ian and Tess McNamara and Nora O'Neill; two son-in-laws, Nick Hannon, Steve McNamara; a daughter-in-law, Christine O'Neill; and 27 nieces and nephews. He was brother of the late Peggy O'Neill, John and Thomas O'Neill.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony Church in Cohasset. Interment was private.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers memorial contributions to the St. Francis Home, 39 Boylston St., Boston, 02116 would be sincerely appreciated.

Carolyn E. Jason

Loved the ocean

Carolyn E. (Richards) Jason, 78, of Scituate, died Thursday, Sept. 1, at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

Born and raised in Hingham, she attended Thayer Academy in Braintree, and moved to Third Cliff in Scituate in the 1950s.

Mrs. Jason worked as a hostess and waitress at many coastal restaurants including The Scituate Cabin, Kimball's, and Hugo's Lighthouse both in Cohasset. Her favorite was hostessing at The Country Fare in Hingham. She also worked many years for Mass. Bay Lines providing charters with clambakes .

She enjoyed lobstering and gillnetting on the "Blue Heather" with her late husband of 54 years, and love of her life Captain Herbert L. Jason of Cohasset, who died in July. She was always drawn to the ocean, and loved visiting Cape Cod and Nantucket. She enjoyed beachcombing for sea glass, sea shells and lobster buoys Mrs. Jason also enjoyed spending time at home with her family

She decorated her Third Cliff home for every holiday, and relatives, neighbors and friends were always welcome. She enjoyed spending time with her daughter, Heather, and especially loved her smile.

As a youth, she sang in the choir of the Old Ship Church in Hingham. She always enjoyed music including the song "Because of You" by Tony Bennett. She had many hobbies and loved tennis, ice skating and was a cheerleader at Hingham High School.

She leaves her daughter, Heather C. Dauphinee and her husband, Frederick of Scituate, and a sister, Muriel D. Ferris of Hingham. She also leaves three grandsons, four great-grandsons, a great-granddaughter and many nieces and nephews. She was also sister of the late Frederick H. Richards Jr. and the late Kenneth C. Richards.

A funeral service was conducted at the Downing Cottage Funeral Chapel in Hingham. Interment was in High Street Cemetery, Hingham.

In lieu of flowers, donations in her memory may be made to the Scituate Firefighters Local # 1464, 149 First Parish Rd., Scituate, 02066 or to Norwell Visiting Nurse Assoc., 320 Washington St., Suite 10, Norwell, 02061.

The Mariner welcomes photos of your loved ones to accompany obituaries by e-mail to mford@cnc.com or by mail to 73 South Street, Hing-ham, MA 02043

In the Scripture lessons for the Seventeenth Sunday after Pentecost, The first lesson counsels us to let go of anger and replace it with the same forgiveness which we ask for ourselves. Paul's letter calls upon the Roman disciples to live with tolerance for one another's scruples, recognizing that everything can be done to honor the Lord with whom each Christina has a relationship. In the Gospel, Jesus tells a parable about a man, who though forgiven much, still himself had no mercy. Preacher: the Reverend Beth Wheatley-Dyson.

Summer sail

Patrick Cantillion takes a written test at the sailing club to ensure he has learned all he must know to safely take to the ocean in a sail boat. Boys and girls from the Cohasset Sailing Club were in the harbor practicing their skills.

Community Garden Club hosts fall bulb sale

Fall is the time to plan for spring flowers and September is the month to make garden space for brown bulbs that will burst into glorious color in April and May. The Community Garden Club of Cohasset has a special collection of tulip, daffodil and early blooming bulbs on sale now. These are outstanding top-size bulbs and should be ordered now for planting in October when the weather has cooled. Orders can be placed immediately by calling 781-383-0998. In addition, Garden Club members will be selling bulbs at the October Farmers' Markets. Photographs of the flowers and ordering information are available at www.communitygardenclubofcohasset.org.

Tulips are $1 each; daffodils $1.50 each, and the small muscari and scilla will be sold in bags of 20 at prices ranging from $5 to $10 per bag, depending on the variety. Proceeds from the annual fall bulb sale benefit the Cohasset community projects maintained by the Community Garden Club.

This year's bulb selection includes 11 varieties of tulips from small species bulbs perfect for naturalizing to large double peony-flowered tulips and the hard to find viridiflora, 'Spring Green.' The four daffodil choices are fragrant and uncommon varieties that will return year after year in well-drained soil. Plantings of the small deep or pale blue muscari and bright cobalt scilla 'Spring Beauty' can spread a lush blue carpet beneath taller bulbs and emerging perennials.

The Garden Club recommends planting clusters of tulips or daffodils 6 to 8 inches deep, filling the hole halfway with soil mixed with a small handful of bulb fertilizer, and topping off with a half dozen or more of small muscari "Grape Hyacinth" or scilla bulbs and the final three inches of garden soil. This combination will put on a beautiful spring show. Bulbs can be tucked into small pockets between perennials, and are especially dramatic when planted in large drifts. Daffodil and muscari bulbs can also be planted in pots and kept just above freezing in a garage or cold frame during the winter. Bring them into a sunny room or porch in late February for a head start on garden plants still under snow. Potted tulips need to be chilled in the refrigerator vegetable drawer for eight weeks before planting in containers and kept in a cool basement or garage until their leaves begin poking through the soil. It is then time to bring them into a sunny window to continue growing for spring bloom. Just don't mistake them for shallots and chop them for Thanksgiving dinner!

Weather forecaster to speak on Sept. 14

Cohasset native Robert Thompson from the National Weather Service Forecasting Office in Taunton will speak about local maritime weather events that shaped history and how to forecast hazardous conditions.

Many businesses are based on weather forecasts such as extra fuel is needed for aircraft; whether to release water from reservoirs; apply freeze protection to crops; line up extra snow-plowing; cancel school, and so on.

Thompson's talk is 6:30 p.m., Sept. 14 at the Community Center, 3 N. Main St. There is no charge for the presentation but reservations are required for a light dinner with a $3 donation to Cohasset Elder Affairs. Please call, 781-383-9112.

Organ concert on Sunday, Sept. 18

St. Stephen's Church launches its concert season with a music festival on Sunday, Sept. 18 at the church on 16 Highland Ave., beginning at 3 p.m., featuring an organ recital and choral evensong to be given by the American Organists Guild. Admission is free, and donations will be accepted. Ample parking is available at the village car park. For more information, call 781-383-1083.

The program begins at 3 p.m. with an organ recital on St. Stephen's 58-rank Aeolian-Skinner organ by Scott Lamlein, director of music at Wesley United Methodist Church in Worcester, where he serves a large urban and multi-cultural congregation. Originally from Holyoke, Lamlein received his degree from the Hartt School of the University of Hartford in Connecticut. He is noted for the variety of works he performs as well as the great depth of spirituality they convey. His performance will be followed by a carillon recital on the 57 bell Cohasset carillon at 4:30 p.m., given by Sally Slade-Warner, in an open tower for viewing by those attending the festival.

A Choral Evensong at 5 p.m. will open for the recital to be given by the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists. Selections include the Schola Sine Nomine, conducted by Dr. G. Fredrick Guzasky, vesper canticles by Herbert Howells, Anglican chant, hymns and anthems.

The Rev. E. Clifford Cutler will deliver the sermon and introduce the officers of the Organ Guild.

American Guild of Organists is a national professional organization of church organists, concert artists, and devotees of organ music. In addition to performing throughout the country, the guild assists with professional standards, employment placement, continuing education, advice to churches, certifying organists through examinations, and recruiting young organists. Its Boston chapter is composed of members from the Boston area as well as from around the world. Its motto is Soli Deo Gloria or To God Alone Be Glory, the same used by Bach to dedicate his works.

Health fair is Sept. 13

The Cohasset Board of Health will sponsor a Health Screening Day Tuesday, Sept. 13, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave. (next to Town Hall). Free screenings and demonstrations include Medicare and Social Security information, cholesterol and blood sugar screening, blood pressure, osteoporosis, oral cancer, skin analyzer, nutrition and natural foods, massage therapy, smoking cessation, chiropractic care, family emergency and disaster planning, Cohasset Water Department water quality, CEA. Healthy snacks and beverages served. For more information, call Judy Fitzsimmons, RN, at 781-383-2210 or Cohasset Board of Health, 781-383-4116.

South Shore ARC to host art and wine tasting fundraiser

The ARC of the South Shore will host an Art from the Heart art show and wine tasting Saturday, Oct. 15 from 5 to 8 p.m. at the South Shore Art Center, 119 Ripley Road, Cohasset, to benefit its program services for children and adults with disabilities. Tickets are $50 per person. Corporate sponsorships are also available. All donations are tax-deductible. Make checks payable to The ARC of the South Shore and send payment to 371 River St., Weymouth, MA 02191. For more information, call Mary Ann Walsh, 781-413-2230 or email mawalsh@arcsouthshore.org.

This year's fundraiser will highlight the artistic talents of children and adults with mental retardation and developmental disabilities. The event will run in conjunction with Piecing it Together, an exhibition of art quilts by New England quiltmakers. Rhoda Cohen, Radka Donnell, Sylvia Einstein, Beatriz Grayson, Nancy Halpern and Ruth B. McDowell. Guests will have an opportunity to bid for items at a silent auction.

All proceeds go to The ARC of the South Shore programs. They include: First Early Intervention serving eligible children from birth to age 3; Harbor Industries and Employment workforce services; Day Habilitation to improve independence levels and functional abilities; Residential Supports that provide housing options; Recreation and Family Support; and Personal Care Attendant services.

Since 1951 the non-profit organization has been helping children and adults with disabilities to achieve their highest level of independence with dignity and self-determination. They provide quality support and advocacy for over 1500 children and adults with mental retardation and cognitive, physical and developmental disabilities, as well as their families. To learn more call 781-335-3023 or visit www.arcsouthshore.org.

Coffeehouse season to start on Sept. 10

Hingham's Coffeehouse off the Square presents the very humorous singer-songwriter Don White on Saturday, Sept. 10 at 8 p.m.

Don draws on life in his hometown of Lynn to present very funny songs of neighborhood and family life. Yet "funny" only begins to describe his writing, storytelling, singing, body language, and facial theatrics. Broad humor is followed by gentle, playful reminiscences and then by sudden heart-wrenching truths. The mixture is as varied and surprising as life itself. In all, it is great theater from one of a kind.

Don illuminates the human experience through his writing and performing. Whether speaking or setting up the sneakiest punch line of the evening, Don has the hearts of his audience.

The Coffeehouse off the Square is at the Old Ship Parish House at 107 Main St., Hingham Square, just up from the Loring Hall Theatre. The evening begins with an open microphone.

Admission is $10 at the door. A variety of coffees, teas and desserts are available for 50 cents. Net proceeds benefit the Unitarian-Universalist Service Committee. Volunteers are welcome.

For further information, call Jim Watson at 781-749-1767.

CONSERVATORY

South Shore Conservatory's Hingham campus opens its doors Saturday, Sept. 17, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. for "Try It, You'll Like It" Day, a day of free classes.

"We like the idea of giving local residents a free class so they can try it out before making a full semester commitment," says SSC President Jim Simpson. "We expect many of our guests to be parents looking for fun fall classes for their children."

The Certificate Program, with Stephen Deitz, begins the day at 9 a.m. This program is for school-age musicians interested in pursuing a more in-depth level of music study. Choral Specialist Jennifer Parry runs a beginning Little Stars Chorus class at 10 a.m., followed by a choral class for older students, ages 9 through 13.

At 11 a.m., budding guitarists, ages 7 and 8, are invited to join John McCarthy for a little Guitar Fun. Adult beginners can try out some comfortable keyboarding with Tom Boyer at 11:30 a.m. as he presents Piano/Keyboard for Adult Beginners.

School-age students are invited to try their hand at theatre games and improvisation at 1 p.m. in Drama Workshop presented by Drama Director Ellen Kelly. At 2 p.m., children and adults are invited to join Ed Sorrentino for the Drum Circle, a hands-on, rhythm-based musical activity for all age groups. No prior experience necessary.

José Mateo's Ballet Theatre, South Shore Conservatory's artists-in-residence, presents Creative Dance, ballet fun for children ages 3-5, at 3 p.m.

Jose Mateo's Ballet Theatre runs a free Creative Dance class for children ages 3 - 5, at 3 p.m., as part of South Shore Conservatory's "Try It, You'll Like It" Day, Saturday, Sept. 17.

In addition to attending the free classes, the public is invited to listen to the jazz/rock ensemble performing in the lobby from noon - 12:30 p.m., and to a student chamber music group performing from 2 - 2:30 p.m. Refreshments will be served.

Fall semester of classes begins Sept. 19. South Shore Conservatory is located at One Conservatory Drive. For more information or directions, visit the Web site at www.southshoreconservatory.org or call 781-934-2731, Ext. 10.

IT'S HAPPENING

Curves collecting children's books

From now through the end of September, Curves of Cohasset will be collecting children's books for the victims of Hurricane Katrina, who will be staying at Otis Air Force Base, Camp Edwards. Reading can be a source of comfort for both children and their parents during stressful times. In the event those displaced by the disaster are not evacuated to Edwards, Curves will give all donated books directly to the American Red Cross.

This book drive is for children's books only and all books should be in good condition. Books can be brought to Curves of Cohasset, 130 King St., Jonathan Livingston Square, Route 3A, Cohasset, during normal business hours Monday through Thursday, 7 a.m. to 8 p.m.; Friday, 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.; and Saturday, 7 a.m. to noon.

Call owner Terry Vergobbe, 781-383-6606 with any questions.

Stop & Shop collects for hurricane victims

Stop & Shop is collecting customer donations for the Hurricane Katrina relief effort in the American Gulf Coast.

All funds collected from the drive will go to the American Red Cross and America's Second Harvest—The Nation's Food Bank Network -- to help the victims of one of the most devastating storms in American history.

The supermarket chain is also collecting donations from associates at their main offices and distribution facilities.

Vitamins for hurricane victims

All The Best, the Natural Foods Store at One Pleasant Street in Cohasset, has announced a way to help supply quality adult multi-vitamins and children's chewable vitamins to the victims of Hurricane Katrina.

During the month of September, 5 percent of all vitamin and supplement sales at the store will be donated to The Vitamin Angels Alliance. The Alliance is a non-profit group that provides vitamins, supplements, and other health supplies to areas hard hit by famine, war, severe poverty, and natural disasters. This work has primarily been in foreign countries. But this help is critically needed closer to home now.

According to David Bigley, owner of All The Best, "I believe that everyone, regardless of their circumstances, should be taking a good quality multi-vitamin daily.

"The stress that these people are under right now is unimaginable. They have a critical need for additional vitamin supplements, and we're delighted to do what we can to help," he said.

Stop by All The Best at One Pleasant Street, or call 781 383 3005 for more details. If they do not have your favorite vitamin or supplement in stock they will be glad to special order it.

How you can help

The Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) web site provided the following list of organizations to which donations may be made or further information may be obtained regarding the relief effort:

American Red Cross, 1-800-HELP NOW (435-7669). Online donations: www.moveon.org.

Operation Blessing(www.ob.org), 1-800-436-6348;

America's Second Harvest (www.secondharvest.org), 1-800-344-8070;

Salvation Army (www.salvationarmyusa.org),1-800-SAL-ARMY (725-2769)

www.hurricanehousing.org – As FEMA and the American Red Cross scrambled to find housing for the homeless, an emergency national housing drive was launched to connect "empty beds with hurricane victims who desperately need a place to wait out the storm." Offers of housing may be posted (whether a spare room, extra bed, or even a comfortable couch) and available housing searched for through this website. Although housing is most urgently needed within reasonable driving distances (about 300 miles) of New Orleans, housing at any location could make a difference to an individual or family in need.

Hingham Lions Club conducts food, clothing drive

The Hingham Lions Club is collecting food and clothing for victims of the New Orleans disaster. The collection will take place through Sun., Sept. 11 in the Bathing Beach parking lot off Rte. 3A at Hingham Harbor.

The club is accepting non-perishable food items and adult and children's clothing donated by Hingham residents. The first truckload will be driven to the New Orleans area Sept. 8 or 9 in a truck provided by Daley and Wanzer of Hull.

Andrew Cutliff, a former Hull resident who lives in New Orleans with his family, which was in the South Shore area when the hurricane hit, is spearheading the Louisiana end of the effort, including the distribution of the donated food and clothing. Cutliff moved to New Orleans in the 1980s to attend Tulane University.

Lions Club member Bonnard Fage, who is chairing the effort, came up with the idea. "I just had to do it," he said. "I saw a 75-year-old on television who had lived in the area all his life and had lost everything. He said it was like going from heaven to hell in an instant because of the complete devastation."

He emphasized that the items are going directly to the affected areas, including Slidell, Abita Springs, Madisonville, Mandeville, and Covington, which are in the north shore area of Lake Pontchartrain. The food and clothing will be distributed through various religious and civic organizations.

The Hingham Lions Club first truck was scheduled to leave for the disaster area yesterday (Sept. 8). The donations, shown here in the Bathing Beach parking lot, will be going into the north shore area of Lake Ponchartrain. Donations of children's and adult clothing – separated into categories and suitable for the warmer New Orleans climate which does grow cooler as the summer ends – are needed as well as linens and blankets. Non-perishable food items such as canned goods, pasta, and pasta sauce are also being collected through Sept. 11.

Donations of children's and adult clothing – separated into categories and suitable for the warmer New Orleans climate which does grow cooler as the summer ends – are needed as well as linens and blankets.

Non-perishable food items such as canned goods, pasta, and pasta sauce are also being collected.

"Everybody – rich or poor – can throw in a couple of dollars' worth of soup," said Richard Lamb of the Lions Club. "It's wouldn't be right not to give something. This is all about humanity. We're very excited about this drive and hope it will make Hingham proud."

When news of the hurricane came, Lamb said he didn't realize the magnitude of the damage at first. But as the impact of the storm became apparent, he, his family, and others were "stunned by the devastation."

Volunteers may be needed to sort the donated items. For further information about the effort, call Fage at (781) 740-2008.

DESTINATIONS

The Real O.C.

There's more to California's famous getaway than TV shows

By TENLEY WOODMAN

HUNTINGTON BEACH, Calif. -- I hate the sun, so why did I visit Orange County?

As a pale New Englander with a love of wool sweaters, I feared entering the world of the bronzed and beautiful.

From what I'd seen on Fox's hit drama "The O.C." and MTV's reality series "Laguna Beach: The Real Orange County," without a Louis Vuitton suitcase and knockout abs I was going to have to hide in my hotel room all weekend.

But I came to Orange County to find the area's true identity, beneath the silicon implants, permanent tans and designer clothes shown on TV. And I found it.

For starters, locals never call the area the O.C. But surfing is a must.

My hotel, the Hyatt Regency Resort and Spa at Huntington Beach, has the perfect place to learn how to hang 10: the "Toes on the Nose" surf shop. All the shop's instructors have competed on the surfing circuit.

Thinking of "Laguna Beach's" body-beautiful teens (who really are local high school students) and "The O.C.'s" willowy actress Mischa Barton I was leary about wearing the required skin-tight wet suit for my lesson.

But with the reassurance of my instructor I hit the waves at Balboa Pier in Newport Beach.

After watching someone old enough to be my father with a middle-aged paunch wipe out on a wave, I didn't feel too silly teetering on my board. And, hey, if Sandy Cohen (Peter Gallagher) can do it daily on "The O.C.," why not?

Virgin surfers are eased into taming the waves with on-shore instruction, including tips on how to properly "pop up" on the board and balance points on water.

Despite the hype TV has given the affluent beachside communities in Orange County, I found locals to be unpretentious.

In fact the locals I spoke with never thought "The O.C." would make it past the first season (the third season in fact begins tonight). Now, due to the show's popularity, the visitors bureau has created a map of locations used or alluded to on "The O.C."

Big Corona Beach State Park, located below Pelican Hill, where the fictious Cohen family from 'The O.C.' live, is a fine place to perch your surf-perfect bod for some sun and fun.

At the Newport Beach Conference & Visitors Bureau, "The O.C." cast and producer's handprints are now imbedded in cement, for those who are easily impressed.

The show is not actually taped in Orange County due to high filming costs. Instead the TV wizards use studios farther north in Santa Monica and Manhattan Beach. Aerial and exterior shots from the real Orange County are used, however.

Touring the actual locations proves the area is not as glamorous or compact as the show leads you to believe. Renting a car is a must.

Minus the brooding soundtrack and the sparks between Seth (Adam Brody) and Summer (Rachel Bilson) or Marissa (Mischa Barton) and Ryan (Benjamin McKenzie), it would be easy to overlook many of the spots highlighted if you weren't specifically seeking them out. Without a map, Marissa's beach hideaway easily could be missed, as would the shack (really on Newport Pier but just a shack) that doubles as the group's favorite hangout, the Bait Shop.

Fashion Island, featured in 'The O.C.,' bustles with high-fashion shoppers.

But these are real places you can see.

So are Newport Harbor High School, which doubles as Harbor High on the show, and Balboa Fun Zone, where what seems like eons ago Marissa and Ryan shared their first kiss on the Ferris wheel.

Less accessible, yet recognizable, Pelican Hill, the supposed Cohen residence in swanky Newport Beach, is a private gated community. But you can only catch glimpses over the gate.

Driving down the Pacific Coast Highway (also known as Route 101, as referenced in the show's title track "California" by Phantom Planet) you'll recognize Crystal Cove's elaborate homes jutting out above the ocean as the aerial shot used in the opening credits of the show. This is probably the best place to pose for photos to impress you friends back home ("Look, me in the O.C.").

Fans also can chow down at Thaifoon-Taste of Asia at Fashion Island in Newport, the Cohen family's favorite takeout restaurant on the show. Fashion Island is also the place where the girls shop on the show.

"Laguna Beach" fans will want to check out the real Laguna Beach, which I couldn't do because of mud slides in the area during my visit. There is no map for this show, but the locations seen on the show are real -- it's a "documentary" after all.

To grasp the cushy lifestyle from "The O.C." and "Laguna Beach" without going bankrupt, check into the sprawling Hyatt Regency (rates from $240 per night). Though located next to a refinery, the Hyatt feels like an isolated paradise (85 percent of the rooms have a view of the ocean).

Guests can have their own hot tub rendezvous like LC and Stephen from "Laguna Beach" in the spa grotto. These secluded pools are perfect for relaxing and romancing.

The beach is literally just across the Pacific Coast Highway, and a special pedestrian bridge from the hotel provides easy access.

At the end of the day, Californians, even those in Orange County, are people too. And you don't have to weigh 90 pounds to enjoy the scenery.

For more information on the Hyatt Regency Resort and Spa, go to www.huntingtonbeach.hyatt.com or call 714-698-1234. To learn more about Newport Beach, go to www.newport-beach-cvb.com.

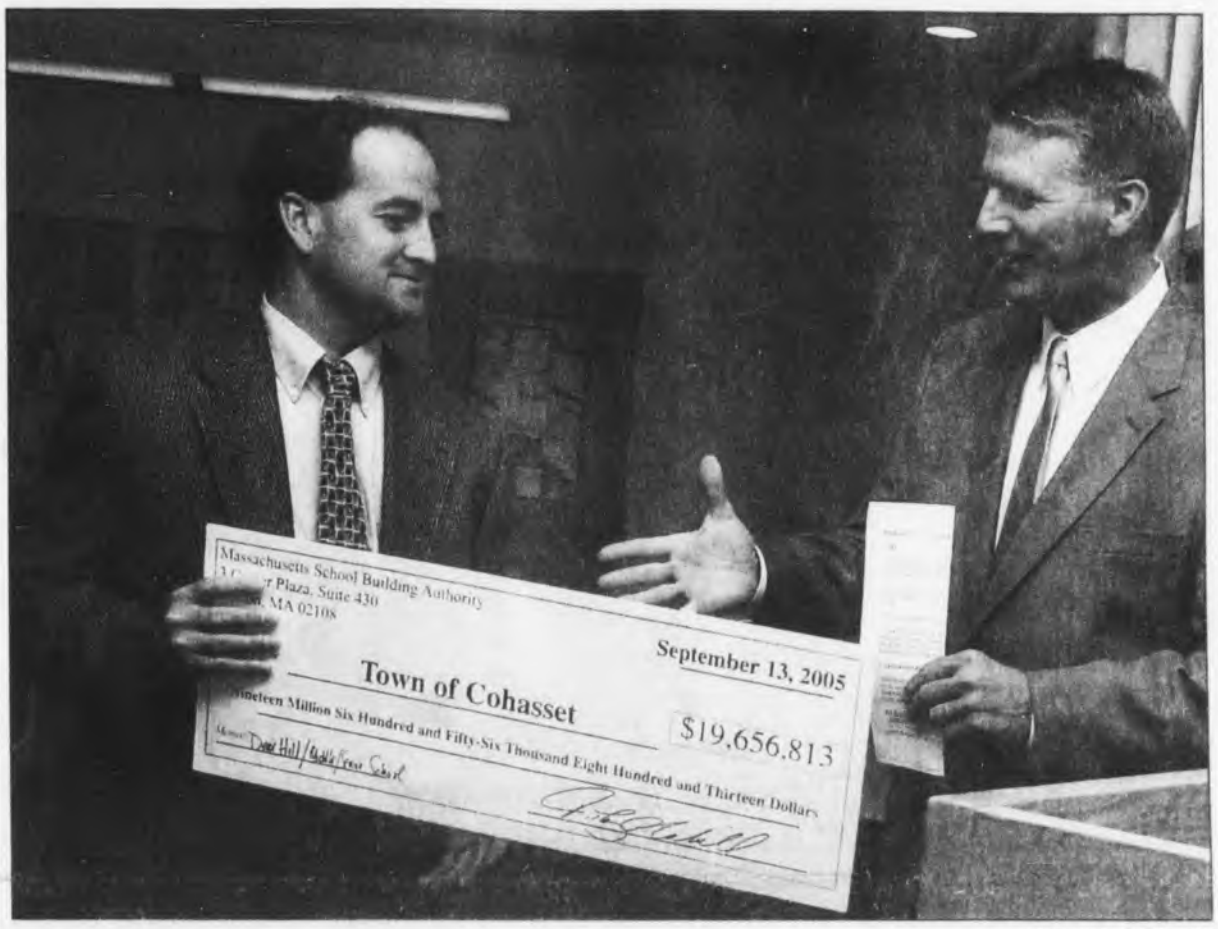
Bug alert

Avoid mosquitoes whenever possible

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Cases of eastern equine encephalitis (EEE) have been reported this summer in Massachusetts in various South Shore communities but none in Cohasset.



"So far, there have been no cases reported," of EEE in Cohasset, said Tara Tradd of the board of health office. "We're not being told by the state (any action is necessary at this point)", she said.

The deadly virus is spread to humans through mosquito bites.

Encephalitis refers to any condition in which there is swelling of the brain. According to the Plymouth County Mosquito Control board — which is responsible for addressing mosquito problems in close to 30 towns along the southern Massachusetts coast including Cohasset — EEE is a rare disease caused by a virus that has been found along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of the United States as well as Michigan.

State antes up its share of school costs

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset's town coffers just increased by nearly $20 million.

The money will go toward paying the state's share — roughly 60 percent — of the town's $42 million middle-high and Deer Hill school construction projects and translate into substantial savings for the Cohasset taxpayer.

Town Finance Director Michael Buckley says the owner of a home valued at $600,000 will save about $2,400 or $800 in fiscal 2006, 2007 and 2008, the years property taxes were expected to "bump up" to cover the full borrowing costs before the state reimbursement kicked in.

Now, thanks to special legislation and Buckley — who blew the whistle on the state Department of Education's plans to fix its promised reimbursement schedule nearly four years ago — the financial calculus surrounding school building projects has taken a 180-degree turn.

Back in 2002, the DOE said it

Honoring those who serve the nation

Wigmore elected to national Legion post

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Thomas Wigmore has dedicated his life to ensuring those who protect the nation are taken care of. He wants to teach children the values of good citizenship. He wants to ensure the traditions and values of the American people continue on for generations. He is a member of the Sons of the American Legion.

But not only has he been a dedicated member of the volunteer organization for more than 15 years, Wigmore was recently elected to serve as the National Vice Commander of the Eastern Region for the Sons of the American Legion.

"I'm very honored to be the National Vice Commander this year," he said, adding from the campaigning which began in March, to being elected to the position last month — nothing would have been possible without all the help he has received.

Wigmore was notified of his new appointment Aug. 21, during the 34th annual Sons of the American Legion Convention in Honolulu, Hawaii. In his new role, Wigmore will serve as a leader and will be responsible for promoting Legion membership and bringing many programs to fruition. His territory will cover the states of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland, Maine, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, West Virginia, as well as the District of Columbia and surprisingly enough, the country of France.

Thomas Wigmore, who works as a civilian dispatcher, is the new National Vice Commander of the Eastern Region for the Sons of the American Legion.

Wigmore explained the American Legion was formed in March of 1919 in Paris, France following the official end of World War I that previous November. Since then, there has always been an active American Legion Post in France for which he will serve as a liaison.

At home, Wigmore said his wife Deirdre played an integral role in the fund-raising for his campaign, as did many of his fellow Legion members from

Cook Estate extension voted

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The board returned to open session after roughly one hour and voted 4-0 to pay the $20,000 to extend the date to pass papers until Oct. 15.

Plans to work with Deer Hill Partners to build senior housing on the Cook Estate appear to be moving forward, despite some complications with deadlines and lawsuits.

Yesterday (Thursday) marked the deadline for the town to either purchase the Cook property and then immediately sell it to the developer for a profit — or pay $20,000 to extend the purchase and sale agreement with the heirs of the estate.

To prepare for the impending deadline, selectmen met Monday solely for the purpose of discussing the Cook Estate. The board entered into executive session to speak with legal counsel

New subdivision up in arms over potential throughway

MBTA planned new 'driveway'

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Ledgewood Farm Drive residents are not happy with the MBTA. Without warning, residents of the quiet cul-de-sac off Brewster Road awoke one morning to find trees flagged for clearing that would have provided access to their street from Lincoln Lane off South Main Street.

Neighbors say the potential exists to turn the area into a major thoroughfare with the train station planned for North Scituate.

Meanwhile another homeowner is finding out what it's like to be from "the other side of the tracks."

While Peter Collins of 425 South Main St. has a South Main Street address, access to his home is by way of Lincoln Lane, which is off of South Main Street just before the Scituate line.

Lincoln Lane will be bisected by the Greenbush tracks preventing access to his home. There will be no grade crossing on Lincoln Lane and therefore no through traffic to the Collins home.

The tree flagging was part of the MBTA's plans to create a new driveway for the Collins property that would connect to Ledgewood Farm Drive.

Ledgewood Farm Drive neighbors came before selectmen last month in a panic, having just discovered the flagged trees.

"What if we had been on vacation?" asked Randy Patterson, 12 Ledgewood Farm Drive, adding the whole neighborhood is shocked by what has happened. He said they are worried their street could become a throughway for Scituate's Gannett Pasture Road residents to access Rte. 3A.

However, in addition to the concerns of the Ledgewood neighbors, questions have surfaced regarding ownership and rights, further complicating the issue.

Cohasset Greenbush liaison Tom Gruber explained going back in time, Ledgewood Drive — which is accessed from Brewster Road off Rte. 3A near the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank — used to stop where it now extends to the right as Ledgewood Farm Drive. Ledgewood Farm Drive was approved as a subdivision in 1995 by the planning board and is now the site of new homes, as well homes still under construction. All subdivisions in town are under the jurisdiction of the planning board.

When the permit was granted to build the Ledgewood Farm subdivision, there were a certain number of homes approved. Granting the Collins' property access to the road would add it to the subdivision, which is illegal without the consent of the planning board, Gruber said.

But there is also a dispute over whether the easement the MBTA wants to use to give the Collins property access really belongs to the Collinses.

Gruber explained going way back into the Ledgewood area history, a man with the last name Hobart used to own a large portion of the surrounding land. In the 1960s, he sold much of the land but retained the right to access a roadway, should one ever be built. The land was later bought by Collins, but he has since sold off part of the land as individual lots. Now, there is a dispute as to whether he may have sold off the easement with one of them.

Representatives of the MBTA as well as Gruber and residents of Ledgewood Farm Drive have been continually meeting to iron out the issues. Currently, clearing in the area has stopped, as building inspector Bob Egan issued a cease and desist on behalf of the planning board. Egan said since attention has been brought to the matter, "What they (MBTA) thought they knew about rights and easements may not be true."

Planning board chairman Al Moore said if the MBTA decides to form some kind of an access road for the Collins property, the matter will have to come before his board with an application to change the permit for the subdivision. The planning board would then re-open the subdivision plans and hold a hearing on the addition. Nothing has been filed as of yet.

"Our role would be not much, if any, unless they want to reopen the subdivision," said Moore.

Negotiations will decide the fate of the issue and the matter may again come before either the board of selectmen or the planning board. For more information on the MBTA projects happening around town, please contact Greenbush liaisons Tom Gruber or Mark Brennan at (781) 383-3094 or via e-mail. Gruber can be reached at cgbaffairs@townofcohasset.org and Brennan can be reached at cgbengineering@townofcohasset.org.

New agenda for school committee

Members of the school committee met with a representative from the Massachusetts Association of School Committees in August to discuss ways to better enhance communication and productivity during meetings. Chairman Jamie Williams said in light of discussions which took place during that meeting, it might make sense for the school committee to test out a new meeting format for the next three months.

Williams suggested during the trial period, discussion be narrowed to include only business items during the first meeting of the month. The second meeting of the month will be more informal, filled with discussion and sharing ideas. The school committee typically meets the first and third Thursdays of every month.

Williams said at the informal meetings, groups such as the strategic planning action committees may come in and share information with the board. The schools are beginning year two of their five-year strategic plan, which outlines future goals for the district. Smaller action committees have been formed to delve into specific areas of the plan.

Member Alfred Slanetz supported Williams' suggestion. "I think this is an excellent idea. We need to use this year as a strategic year," he said.

The board thought it would be best to not hold any votes during the informal meeting nights, except to approve the warrant — a financial update given by the school business manager.

Member Adrienne MacCarthy said while the meetings should be informal, there should be some planning, an agenda will be needed and board members will need time to prepare and collect information about the night's topic. "It should be informal, but somewhat formal so we can be prepared," MacCarthy said.

The board will try out its new format beginning in October. Meetings are scheduled for Oct. 6 and 20.

Harbor health discussion Sept. 22

The Harbor Health Committee is conducting a roundtable discussion with members of relative boards/committees/associations from 7-9 p.m., Thursday, Sept. 22 at Town Hall.

The purpose of the meeting is to explore the various contributors to the harbor and what, if any, influence they may be exerting on the harbor's marine environment.

The goal of the meeting is to begin the process of determining a 'big picture' intercooperative-plan for analysis and remediation of any sources of pollution.

The HHC has already held a meeting with the Center for Student Coastal Research at which the students presented the committee with a written report summarizing their data as collected over the summer.

The meeting is open to the public and a brief (15 minute) public comment time will be scheduled at the start of the meeting.

To comment prior to the meeting, contact chairman Karen Quigley at 781-383-6368 or by email: kmquigley@comcast.net.

Why is a Career in CART and Captioning the Future?
• Ability to start on the ground floor in a new industry
• Potential to earn $35 to$100/ hour
• Work at home (95% do) and set your own hours
• It is the law!
• American Disabilities Act mandates equal access but large percentage of requests go unfilled
• FCC mandates by 2006 all TV programming must be captioned, but not enough realtime captioners
• Federal law requires agencies, schools and institutions provide hearing impaired services, but few CART providers to meet the need
• Demand will continue to increase with aging of baby boomers
What are CART and Captioning?
• CART/Captioning provide communication access for the hearing impaired
• Captioning provides text for TV programs, video conferences, multimedia, video games, etc.
• CART provides visual communication in educational settings, conventions, town meetings, etc.

Town opts for Cook Extension

but informed the public about what would be discussed.

Behind closed doors, the board discussed whether it should opt for an extension, as well as how to address the threat of a potential $3 million lawsuit launched by Cohasset Associates, the runner-up in the bid process. In an Aug. 29 letter, Charles Humphreys, the company's attorney, stated if the board did not rescind its vote appointing Deer Hill and appoint Cohasset Associates instead, the company would sue the town.

The board returned to open session after roughly one hour and voted 4-0 to pay the $20,000 to extend the date to pass papers until Oct. 15. Selectman Gary Vanderweil had been present for the executive session discussion but left before the vote was taken. The board also instructed special counsel Myrna Putziger to draft a response to Cohasset Associates.

Deer Hill Partners was awarded the bid to build on the Cook Estate Aug. 16. There has not been adequate time to secure the necessary permits, making an extension the only option to keep the project going. The purchase and sale agreement with the Cook heirs allows the town to extend the deadline to pass papers three times, at a cost of $20,000 for each extension.

Before the vote, Putziger cautioned if for some reason the town is not able to close on the property in the end, the money spent on this or any other extension is non-refundable.

At the November 2003 Special Town Meeting voters gave the town permission to expend $4.5 million to purchase the Cook Estate for senior housing. The money spent on the extensions will come out of that $4.5 million appropriation. Town Manager Bill Griffin said Monday he had instructed Director of Finance Michael Buckley to be ready with a check for $20,000 just in case the board decided to go for the extension. A letter with the check was slated to be hand-delivered to the Cook heirs yesterday (Thursday).

Specifics regarding the Cohasset Associates complaint were not discussed in open session. However, at the conclusion of the executive session, the board said Putziger would draft a letter in response to the complaint, which would also be sent to the Inspector General's office (see sidebar).

Northland Residential was awarded the original bid on the project in March 2004, but wastewater problems on the site required the project be scaled back to accommodate wastewater on site. The project was then sent back out to bid, and three bidders — Cohasset Associates, Deer Hill Partners, and Northland Residential — all responded.

The board voted to tentatively award the project to Deer Hill Partners on Aug. 16, pending successful negotiations of a land disposition agreement (an agreement similar to a purchase and sale). It is still unclear whether the impending threat of a suit from Cohasset Associates will complicate the LDA negotiations.

Bid proposals were ranked according to a point system included in the Request for Proposals, which outlined project qualities the town would like to see in proposals. Deer Hill Partners came out on top with a total of 410.03 points. Cohasset Associates received 392.13, and Northland Residential received 374.76.

Board considers aggressive dog ban

Selectman Michael Sullivan said he recently read an article about a dog mauling which took place and how the community followed up by instating legislation that banned certain breeds of aggressive dogs.

"I think it makes sense to look into that. Whole states have done it," he said, adding while hopefully nothing like that will ever happen in Cohasset, the town could be ahead of the curve by drafting something sooner rather than later.

"I just think it's something to consider," he said.

Sullivan said perhaps the board could bring an article to town meeting this December. The board will take the matter under advisement.

Street light outages

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said traveling through town, he has noticed there are many streets that are dark, either for a lack of street lights or lights which are burnt out. He said Beach Street is especially dark, and the board has received a complaint about it.

Selectman Gary Vanderweil said it has been suggested that reflective white lines be painted along the sides of Beach Street which headlights would illuminate, making it easier for cars to travel the road in the dark.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said he would speak to the police chief about the matter.

Mass Electric must be notified when street lights burn out in order for them to be replaced. To report a light which is either flickering our completely out, please visit the Mass Electric Web site at www.masselectric.com. Town responds to Cohasset Associates complaint

Says protest is without merit

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"The absence of rental units in the Proposal is not a deviation from a requirement."
— Myrna Putziger, special counsel

On Aug. 29, attorney for Cohasset Associates Charles Humphreys sent a letter to the town, which served as a formal Notice of Protest to Deer Hill Partners being awarded the bid for the Cook Estate. The town hand-delivered a letter in response Wednesday.

"The town respectfully advises you that your Protest is without merit," said special counsel Myrna Putziger from Rubin and Rudman, LLP.

Cohasset Associates had contended Deer Hill Partners should not have been awarded the bid because it does not meet the requirements of the RFP for a variety of reasons, including the fact that rental units were required for the project. The company had threatened to sue the town for more than $3 million if the board of selectmen did not rescind its vote to appoint Deer Hill Partners and award Cohasset Associates the bid instead.

But the town disagrees on all points.

"Neither the Town Meeting vote nor the RFP required rental units. The Town Meeting vote requires only that the land authorized to be acquired be used for Senior Housing in accordance with the Town's Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District bylaw, which itself does not require rental units," she said.

Putziger also added the RFP requests bidders describe whether and to what extent their proposed project contains rental units, whether market rate or affordable, but does not mandate them.

"The absence of rental units in the Proposal is not a deviation from a requirement," she said.

Cohasset Associates has also disputed whether the Manor House, the large central building that will house 31 apartments in the Deer Hill project, meet size requirements. Putziger said the plans do meet size requirements.

Cohasset Associates had also argued the Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District bylaw requires units be multi-family, and cannot be single, detached structures as Deer Hill proposed. Putziger said the bylaw defines housing as being one or two bedroom units and/or studio units, which means Deer Hill has complied.

The RFP specified there would be no due diligence period allowed as a contingency to a proposal and Cohasset Associates said Deer Hill's proposal required 30 days. However, Putziger said Deer Hill will not be given any due diligence period. In fact, Deer Hill has negotiated with Northland Residential, the company formerly awarded the bid for the project, and has been able to purchase all due diligence reports completed by that company.

Cohasset Associates said there is also a 75-foot setback requirement for any project built and Deer Hill Partners does not meet that setback. However, Putziger said the RFP only requires 50 feet, as does the Senior Multi-family Overlay District bylaw, and Deer Hill meets that requirement.

Putziger explained to Cohasset Associates the town provided selection criteria in the RFP and there were areas in which their proposal excelled. However, overall, the project was not preferred.

"Cohasset Associates, Inc. may be disappointed that its proposal was not as well regarded as the (Deer Hill) proposal, but the disappointment is not the basis for legal challenge. I trust this matter will be taken no further," said Putziger.

Selectmen exercise caution during executive session

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Prior to closing the doors to the public during its Sept. 12 meeting, members of the board of selectmen said they wanted to be very cautious about topics discussed during executive session.

With transparency at the forefront, selectmen told special counsel Myrna Putziger they would like to limit conversation held in private.

Selectman Rob Spofford said he had received many phone calls from the public prior to the meeting. The Cook Estate has generated much public interest and Spofford said it is crucial for residents to be fully informed, especially where expending money is concerned. With the Sept. 15 deadline to either purchase the property or pay for an extension at hand, the town has a right to know what's going on, he said.

"I'll take your advice, but I think we're walking a fine line," Spofford said to Putziger.

Putziger said in her opinion, some issues surrounding the Cook Estate must be dealt with in closed session, such as the threat of litigation from Cohasset Associates. Putziger also said discussions regarding how to draft a Land Disposition Agreement —a document similar to a purchase and sale agreement — with Deer Hill Partners with the threat of a law suit hanging over the town's head should also be discussed in private. "We can do all the other business in open session," she said.

Spofford said he would like it if all votes on the matter could be taken in open session and the board agreed. Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said in his view, the board should generally, "err on the side of opening up," where executive sessions are concerned.

After the executive session, the board publicly voted 4-0 to pay the $20,000 to extend the purchase and sale agreement another month. Selectman Gary Vanderweil had been present for the executive session discussion, but left the meeting prior to a vote being cast.

According to the Open Meeting Law, governmental bodies are allowed to hold private meetings closed to the public for nine reasons. Legal strategy and the purchase of real estate are two of those reasons, both of which pertain to the Cook Estate.

The Open Meeting law states discussions concerning strategy with respect to ongoing litigation can appropriately be held in private, but only if having the discussion at an open meeting would have a detrimental effect on the litigating position of the governmental body. "Discussions relating to proposed litigation are not covered by this exemption unless that litigation is clearly and imminently threatened," the law states. The Cohasset Associate's threat clearly complies.

In addition, real estate transactions for which open discussion would have a detrimental effect on the negotiating position of the governmental body are also allowed to be held in executive session. "Once the purchase, exchange, lease of other transaction is completed, this exemption may no longer be used," the law states.

Allow right-on-red on Pond Street?

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer would like Town Manager Bill Griffin to look into the possibility of making right hand turns during a red light legal at the intersection of Pond Street and Rte. 3A.

Dormitzer said with the closure at Beechwood Street, Pond Street has become an even more traveled road, and it might make travel easier if right-on-red is allowed.

However, selectman Michael Sullivan said the signs prohibiting right turns on red — which are located both at the corner where cars exit Pond Street to take a right onto Rte. 3A and from Rte. 3A traveling north to take a right onto Pond Street — were purposely put in, especially for student traffic, as the high school is located on Pond Street. Sullivan said motorists were getting used to taking the right off Pond Street and not stopping to look for oncoming traffic, which made for a difficult situation.

Dormitzer said it was something worth looking into, noting right turns on red are allowed at the Beechwood light.

"I guess it's something to look into, but people do get going at a pretty good clip," said Sullivan.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said he would review the matter.

but informed the public about what would be discussed.

Behind closed doors, the board discussed whether it should opt for an extension, as well as how to address the threat of a potential $3 million lawsuit launched by Cohasset Associates, the runner-up in the bid process. In an Aug. 29 letter, Charles Humphreys, the company's attorney, stated if the board did not rescind its vote appointing Deer Hill and appoint Cohasset Associates instead, the company would sue the town.

The board returned to open session after roughly one hour and voted 4-0 to pay the $20,000 to extend the date to pass papers until Oct. 15. Selectman Gary Vanderweil had been present for the executive session discussion but left before the vote was taken. The board also instructed special counsel Myrna Putziger to draft a response to Cohasset Associates.

Deer Hill Partners was awarded the bid to build on the Cook Estate Aug. 16. There has not been adequate time to secure the necessary permits, making an extension the only option to keep the project going. The purchase and sale agreement with the Cook heirs allows the town to extend the deadline to pass papers three times, at a cost of $20,000 for each extension.

Before the vote, Putziger cautioned if for some reason the town is not able to close on the property in the end, the money spent on this or any other extension is non-refundable.

At the November 2003 Special Town Meeting voters gave the town permission to expend $4.5 million to purchase the Cook Estate for senior housing. The money spent on the extensions will come out of that $4.5 million appropriation. Town Manager Bill Griffin said Monday he had instructed Director of Finance Michael Buckley to be ready with a check for $20,000 just in case the board decided to go for the extension. A letter with the check was slated to be hand-delivered to the Cook heirs yesterday (Thursday).

Specifics regarding the Cohasset Associates complaint were not discussed in open session. However, at the conclusion of the executive session, the board said Putziger would draft a letter in response to the complaint, which would also be sent to the Inspector General's office (see sidebar).

Northland Residential was awarded the original bid on the project in March 2004, but wastewater problems on the site required the project be scaled back to accommodate wastewater on site. The project was then sent back out to bid, and three bidders — Cohasset Associates, Deer Hill Partners, and Northland Residential — all responded.

The board voted to tentatively award the project to Deer Hill Partners on Aug. 16, pending successful negotiations of a land disposition agreement (an agreement similar to a purchase and sale). It is still unclear whether the impending threat of a suit from Cohasset Associates will complicate the LDA negotiations.

Bid proposals were ranked according to a point system included in the Request for Proposals, which outlined project qualities the town would like to see in proposals. Deer Hill Partners came out on top with a total of 410.03 points. Cohasset Associates received 392.13, and Northland Residential received 374.76.

Board considers aggressive dog ban

Selectman Michael Sullivan said he recently read an article about a dog mauling which took place and how the community followed up by instating legislation that banned certain breeds of aggressive dogs.

"I think it makes sense to look into that. Whole states have done it," he said, adding while hopefully nothing like that will ever happen in Cohasset, the town could be ahead of the curve by drafting something sooner rather than later.

"I just think it's something to consider," he said.

Sullivan said perhaps the board could bring an article to town meeting this December. The board will take the matter under advisement.

Street light outages

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said traveling through town, he has noticed there are many streets that are dark, either for a lack of street lights or lights which are burnt out. He said Beach Street is especially dark, and the board has received a complaint about it.

Selectman Gary Vanderweil said it has been suggested that reflective white lines be painted along the sides of Beach Street which headlights would illuminate, making it easier for cars to travel the road in the dark.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said he would speak to the police chief about the matter.

Mass Electric must be notified when street lights burn out in order for them to be replaced. To report a light which is either flickering our completely out, please visit the Mass Electric Web site at www.masselectric.com. Please have identifying information ready, including either the pole number or the house number it is in front of.

Town responds to Cohasset Associates complaint

Says protest is without merit

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

"The absence of rental units in the Proposal is not a deviation from a requirement."
— Myrna Putziger, special counsel

On Aug. 29, attorney for Cohasset Associates Charles Humphreys sent a letter to the town, which served as a formal Notice of Protest to Deer Hill Partners being awarded the bid for the Cook Estate. The town hand-delivered a letter in response Wednesday.

"The town respectfully advises you that your Protest is without merit," said special counsel Myrna Putziger from Rubin and Rudman, LLP.

Cohasset Associates had contended Deer Hill Partners should not have been awarded the bid because it does not meet the requirements of the RFP for a variety of reasons, including the fact that rental units were required for the project. The company had threatened to sue the town for more than $3 million if the board of selectmen did not rescind its vote to appoint Deer Hill Partners and award Cohasset Associates the bid instead.

But the town disagrees on all points.

"Neither the Town Meeting vote nor the RFP required rental units. The Town Meeting vote requires only that the land authorized to be acquired be used for Senior Housing in accordance with the Town's Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District bylaw, which itself does not require rental units," she said.

Putziger also added the RFP requests bidders describe whether and to what extent their proposed project contains rental units, whether market rate or affordable, but does not mandate them.

"The absence of rental units in the Proposal is not a deviation from a requirement," she said.

Cohasset Associates has also disputed whether the Manor House, the large central building that will house 31 apartments in the Deer Hill project, meet size requirements. Putziger said the plans do meet size requirements.

Cohasset Associates had also argued the Senior Multi-family Residence Overlay District bylaw requires units be multi-family, and cannot be single, detached structures as Deer Hill proposed. Putziger said the bylaw defines housing as being one or two bedroom units and/or studio units, which means Deer Hill has complied.

The RFP specified there would be no due diligence period allowed as a contingency to a proposal and Cohasset Associates said Deer Hill's proposal required 30 days. However, Putziger said Deer Hill will not be given any due diligence period. In fact, Deer Hill has negotiated with Northland Residential, the company formerly awarded the bid for the project, and has been able to purchase all due diligence reports completed by that company.

Cohasset Associates said there is also a 75-foot setback requirement for any project built and Deer Hill Partners does not meet that setback. However, Putziger said the RFP only requires 50 feet, as does the Senior Multi-family Overlay District bylaw, and Deer Hill meets that requirement.

Putziger explained to Cohasset Associates the town provided selection criteria in the RFP and there were areas in which their proposal excelled. However, overall, the project was not preferred.

"Cohasset Associates, Inc. may be disappointed that its proposal was not as well regarded as the (Deer Hill) proposal, but the disappointment is not the basis for legal challenge. I trust this matter will be taken no further," said Putziger.

Selectmen exercise caution during executive session

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Prior to closing the doors to the public during its Sept. 12 meeting, members of the board of selectmen said they wanted to be very cautious about topics discussed during executive session.

With transparency at the forefront, selectmen told special counsel Myrna Putziger they would like to limit conversation held in private.

Selectman Rob Spofford said he had received many phone calls from the public prior to the meeting. The Cook Estate has generated much public interest and Spofford said it is crucial for residents to be fully informed, especially where expending money is concerned. With the Sept. 15 deadline to either purchase the property or pay for an extension at hand, the town has a right to know what's going on, he said.

"I'll take your advice, but I think we're walking a fine line," Spofford said to Putziger.

Putziger said in her opinion, some issues surrounding the Cook Estate must be dealt with in closed session, such as the threat of litigation from Cohasset Associates. Putziger also said discussions regarding how to draft a Land Disposition Agreement —a document similar to a purchase and sale agreement — with Deer Hill Partners with the threat of a law suit hanging over the town's head should also be discussed in private. "We can do all the other business in open session," she said.

Spofford said he would like it if all votes on the matter could be taken in open session and the board agreed. Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said in his view, the board should generally, "err on the side of opening up," where executive sessions are concerned.

After the executive session, the board publicly voted 4-0 to pay the $20,000 to extend the purchase and sale agreement another month. Selectman Gary Vanderweil had been present for the executive session discussion, but left the meeting prior to a vote being cast.

According to the Open Meeting Law, governmental bodies are allowed to hold private meetings closed to the public for nine reasons. Legal strategy and the purchase of real estate are two of those reasons, both of which pertain to the Cook Estate.

The Open Meeting law states discussions concerning strategy with respect to ongoing litigation can appropriately be held in private, but only if having the discussion at an open meeting would have a detrimental effect on the litigating position of the governmental body. "Discussions relating to proposed litigation are not covered by this exemption unless that litigation is clearly and imminently threatened," the law states. The Cohasset Associate's threat clearly complies.

In addition, real estate transactions for which open discussion would have a detrimental effect on the negotiating position of the governmental body are also allowed to be held in executive session. "Once the purchase, exchange, lease of other transaction is completed, this exemption may no longer be used," the law states.

Allow right-on-red on Pond Street?

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer would like Town Manager Bill Griffin to look into the possibility of making right hand turns during a red light legal at the intersection of Pond Street and Rte. 3A.

Dormitzer said with the closure at Beechwood Street, Pond Street has become an even more traveled road, and it might make travel easier if right-on-red is allowed.

However, selectman Michael Sullivan said the signs prohibiting right turns on red — which are located both at the corner where cars exit Pond Street to take a right onto Rte. 3A and from Rte. 3A traveling north to take a right onto Pond Street — were purposely put in, especially for student traffic, as the high school is located on Pond Street. Sullivan said motorists were getting used to taking the right off Pond Street and not stopping to look for oncoming traffic, which made for a difficult situation.

Dormitzer said it was something worth looking into, noting right turns on red are allowed at the Beechwood light.

"I guess it's something to look into, but people do get going at a pretty good clip," said Sullivan.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said he would review the matter.

Steve Ritts to help hurricane relief effort in Mississippi

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

KATRINA RELIEF

Steve Ritts, son of Gary and Judy, left this past Monday with a one-man tent and his backpack to head down to Meridian, Miss. to stay for as many months as he can helping to rebuild, reunite and aid in any way that he can. Steve is a wonderful young man who is a trained EMT, a skilled carpenter and has extensive computer knowledge to create web sites for those who need them. By doing so, he can help locate missing family members, friends and pets among many other helpful ideas. He will be working with the Meridian Red Cross and more than anything right now, he needs money to stay there and continue his efforts indefinitely.

A fundraiser is in the works for this and your donation is welcome from right now on. Please consider a cash donation made payable to "The Second Congregational Church" with Steve Ritts in the memo section. Steve has a digital camera with him so that he can send updates and photos with the people and places that he will be working with. A slide show will be prepared for people to view and it will feel so great to know that our donations are going to help a specific area that is equally as hard hit as New Orleans, Biloxi and other areas. Please keep reading this column for more information and fundraiser information.

'LITTLE H HAS ARRIVED'

We have the arrival of two beautiful babies to announce this week and welcome to our town!

Kyle, David, Bridget and Joshua(and Kacy the dog too), along with mom and dad, David and Anne Burke are so happy that baby number five has arrived. Henry O'Leary Burke was born on Sept. 9, 2005 weighing 7 lbs., 6 oz. and was 20-1/2 ins. long. "Little H" as he is fondly referred to, is doing well and has so much love being showered on him daily. Congratulations to you all as you settle in with this little guy, he is a lucky little fellow indeed.

NEW BABY GIRL

A sweet baby girl named Peyton Virginia Lord arrived on Aug. 8, 2005 and tipped the scales at 9 lbs. even and was 21 inches long. Big sister Gracyn and mom and dad, Jennifer and David Lord, are in Princess Heaven and enjoying her immensely. Peyton's maternal grandmother is Darlene Spignesi of Madison, Conn. and her paternal grandparents are Irene and David Lord of Cohasset. Best of wishes to all of you.

GIFT WRAP FUNDRAISER

The Osgood and Deer Hill PSO have launched their Innisbrook Gift Wrap Fundraiser this week. There are two wonderful catalogs this year filled with the quality, stylish gift wrap Innisbrook is known for, but also available are many neat gift ideas and candy and chocolate. New this year is an opportunity to purchase from a wide selection of magazine subscriptions. As always, 50 percent of all sales go directly to the PSO and orders can be placed with students, at the schools or online.

The fundraiser will end on Oct. 3. If you have any questions or would like to place an order, please call Mary Jo Blackington at 781-383-0626.

SUNRISE SETS SAIL

Residents of Sunrise off Rte. 3A packed a picnic lunch and enjoyed a trip from Quincy to Boston and out to Hull before returning to Quincy. They got a big kick out of the sight of the USS Salem dockside. From left are: Daniel Cotton, Tommy Spirito, Joan Cameron, Lisa Hartmann, Murray Gilpin, Virginia Babij, Wyoma Ainslie, Nazia Giand, Esther Pinkney, Ethel Richardson, and Josephine Molinari.

Please read more about the fundraiser in "School Notebook" on page 19.

NOW, THAT'S ITALIAN!

Mmm, Mmm good! Sept. 22 is Italian Night at the Beechwood Church. Chef Prosciutto will prepare the special meal for your family and friends. Come and enjoy a touch of Italy. Reserve your tickets by calling Linda at 383-9131. Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for children.

FALL PROGRAMS

The Cohasset Recreation Department flyers for Fall programs is coming home in your child's backpacks for children in Preschool through grades 5. There are many wonderful and fun classes that have been added to the already great offerings from the past. Make sure to look for it over the weekend.

PUMPKIN PATCH

The Pumpkin Patch is coming back! Mark your calendars! Beginning Oct. 8 right through Halloween you can fill ALL your pumpkin needs at 'the patch' located in Wheelwright Park on North Main Street. The proceeds will benefit the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project which will be performing home repairs in impoverished areas of Kentucky in June, 2006. Hours will be from 10a.m. to 7p.m. daily. Stay tuned for more details and thank you for your support.

TRYOUT FOR BASEBALL

The tryout for the 2006 CYBSA major league baseball season will be held on Saturday, Sept. 24 at Chase Field at 1 p.m.. All boys and girls who are 10, 11 or 12 years old as of April 30, 2006 who wish to play in the CYBSA major league baseball division and who are not currently on a CYBSA major league baseball team are eligible and invited to tryout. All eligible 12 year olds who tryout will be assigned to a major league team; however, all eligible 12 yr olds must attend the tryout to be assigned to a major league team.

There will the sign-up sheets at the Pack Meeting for parents who will help out during the year as a den leader or with a Pack Activity. First grade boys can be Tiger Cubs. The Tigers meet in small groups once a month. Any boy interested in Tigers can call either Linda Farrag or Jane Long at 781-383-1284.

TRAFFIC SAFETY

Joseph's Hardware in Cohasset generously donated a "little green buddy," a brightly colored warning sign that advised motorists of children in the area to the Jenkins School in Scituate. Jenkins School has had huge increase in the number of walkers and many families are parking at St. Mary's parking lot and walking up First Parish. Many thanks to Barry at Joseph's Hardware for his generous donation and help in keeping our children safe! Many thanks as well to the community volunteers helping us during the beginning of the school year. Great donation Barry, it takes a village to raise our children, that is for sure.

DEAN'S LIST

Hats off to Nell B. Brewer, Susan M. Dane, Sera A. Genovese and Andrew B. Wise who were named to the Dean's List at UMass Amherst for the spring 2005 term. Great job to all of you.

Cohasset couple assists in hurricane Katrina relief

A Cohasset couple has answered the call for relief help along the hurricane-ravaged Gulf Coast.

Dr. Barbara Lynne O'Pray of Cohasset, former Chief of Pediatrics at Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Medical Department and now chairman of MIT's Animal Care and Human Use Committee, left Tuesday with a special medical team of physicians from Massachusetts General Hospital to assist the Red Cross in assessing and treating the medical and psychiatric needs of hurricane victims.

O'Pray, MIT's first female physician 33 years ago, is an expert in pediatric and adolescent medicine, and is board certified on the staffs of Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston Children's Hospital, Brigham & Women's Hospital and Mt. Auburn Hospital.

O'Pray will be stationed for two and a half weeks aboard the US Navy hospital ship Comfort and will be flown with medial teams on Blackhawk helicopters to the gulf's hardest hit areas.

O'Pray's husband, Donald Staszko, also has been involved in hurricane relief efforts, flying special oil and gas assessment teams into the region aboard his corporate fleet of jets, Professional Airways, stationed at Plymouth Airport.

Dr. O'Pray will be stationed for two and a half weeks aboard the US Navy hospital ship Comfort and will be flown with medial teams on Blackhawk helicopters to the gulf's hardest hit areas.

Two hours after Hurricane Katrina stuck, Staszko — a retired captain in the U.S. Air Force Vietnam veteran and an American Airlines pilot for 33 years — received an emergency medical call from the Mississippi coast to fly a 90-year-old woman with a critical heart condition to a hospital in Philadelphia. Staszko's plane was fueled and airborne in hours; the woman survived.

"From my experience in the Air Force and with American Airlines, I know firsthand what natural disasters can do, and the logistics, planning and care it takes to work around them," said Staszko, who heads Cohasset Associates, a construction and development company.

To date, Professional Airways has flown three teams of oil and gas experts to Louisiana to assess pipeline and refinery damage and begin repairs.

Staszko said Wednesday he was proud of his wife, who is en route to the Gulf Coast and not available for interview. "Her work and accomplishments speak for themselves," he said. "She is honored to help the people in this devastated area."

Last December, Staszko himself honored 10 local World War II veterans on the 63rd anniversary of Peal Harbor by flying them aboard his private jet to visit the recently dedicated World War II Veterans Memorial in Washington, DC. Staszko, a Vietnam veteran, said at the time, "I've been very fortunate. It's important to give back to the community you're in."

Local children care about 'Katrina

By Samantha Brown

Although they live many miles from the children affected by hurricane Katrina, children in Cohasset are doing their best to chip in with relief efforts.

On Sunday, Sept. 11, Alexa and Owen Belicken of North Main Street joined together with other neighborhood friends Madison and Kelsea Hindley, Cassandra Lieberman, Carly Norton, and Nicholas and Natalie Simone, to hold a lemonade and iced tea stand and sell cookies, the proceeds of which went to benefit "Cohasset kids care about Katrina kids."

"They know 'something happened' in the hurricane and wanted to help," said Leesa Bleicken, mother of Alexa, 8 and Owen, 5. She added all the kids made banners and even used their own "piggybank" money to donate as well.

"My kids even used some of their 'Disney dollars'— the money they had been earning for our Disney trip in October," Bleicken said.

Bleicken said the children, all dressed in red, white, and blue, on the fourth anniversary of Sept. 11, attached red, white, and blue balloons to their sale table. "What a simple and beautiful way to celebrate being an American," Bleicken said.

The children raised $330 throughout the day, and with the help of Craig Bleicken's employer — John Hancock Real Estate Group of Boston — the funds were matched and the children were able to donate $660 to the Red Cross hurricane Katrina Disaster Relief Fund.

"It was truly special, and the response was outstanding!" Bleicken said.

For more information on donating to the American Red Cross, please visit its Web site at www.redcross.org.

Community Garden Club hosts fall bulb sale

Fall is the time to plan for spring flowers and September is the month to make garden space for brown bulbs that will burst into glorious color in April and May. The Community Garden Club of Cohasset has a special collection of tulip, daffodil and early blooming bulbs on sale now. These are outstanding top-size bulbs and should be ordered now for planting in October when the weather has cooled. Orders can be placed immediately by calling 781-383-0998. In addition, Garden Club members will be selling bulbs at the October Farmers' Markets. Photographs of the flowers and ordering information are available at www.communitygardenclubofcohasset.org.

Tulips are $1 each; daffodils $1.50 each, and the small muscari and scilla will be sold in bags of 20 at prices ranging from $5 to $10 per bag, depending on the variety. Proceeds from the annual fall bulb sale benefit the Cohasset community projects maintained by the Community Garden Club.

This year's bulb selection includes 11 varieties of tulips from small species bulbs perfect for naturalizing to large double peony-flowered tulips and the hard to find viridiflora, 'Spring Green.' The four daffodil choices are fragrant and uncommon varieties that will return year after year in well-drained soil. Plantings of the small deep or pale blue muscari and bright cobalt scilla 'Spring Beauty' can spread a lush blue carpet beneath taller bulbs and emerging perennials.

Pilgrim Coop. Bank raising funds for Katrina victims

Pilgrim Cooperative Bank is currently accepting contributions to assist victims of hurricane Katrina on behalf of the American Red Cross. The bank appreciates the opportunity to join with the Red Cross in this important humanitarian effort. Contributions can be dropped off at either Cohasset office of the bank during regular business hours. For information about hours and locations, call the bank at 781-383-0541 or for more information about the Red Cross, call 1-800-help now or e-mail info@usa.redcross.org.

We'll make you smile.

IT'S HAPPENING

Beechwood Church holds 'Italian Night'

Thursday, Sept. 22, is "Italian Night" at the Beechwood Church on Church Street. Chef Prosciutto (affectionately known as Chef "Ham" and currently residing in Scituate) will prepare the special meal for your family and friends. Come and enjoy a touch of Italy. Dinner is served at 6:30. Reserve your tickets by calling Linda at 781-383-9131. Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for children.

Architect presents slides of Vineyard

The Hingham Public Library and Buttonwood Books & Toys will host Cohasset resident and Boston architect Keith Moskow, on Wed. Sept. 28, 7 p.m., at the Hingham Library. Moskow will deliver a slide presentation incorporating photographs from his book, "The Houses of Martha's Vineyard," which showcases 24 Vineyard homes built in the past 20 years by internationally renowned architects and emerging practitioners.

Stylistically diverse, the featured houses offer environmentally sensitive designs and innovative solutions that respond to, but do not mimic, the island's rich architectural past. The author has strong professional and personal ties to the island where he has completed multiple residential commissions

Moskow is principal of Moskow Architects, a Boston firm that specializes in sustainable architecture. He received a bachelor of arts degree from Dartmouth College in New Hampshire and a master of architecture degree from the University of Pennsylvania. He has received design awards from the Boston Society of Architects, The Municipal Arts Society of New York, the Centre for Critical Architecture, San Francisco, and AIA Chicago.

The slide presentation will be followed by a question and answer segment. Books will be available for purchase. Refreshments will be served. Admission is free and open to the public. Call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 or visit www.buttonwoodbooks.com to order a signed copy if unable to attend.

Fall lecture series begins Sept. 21

The Cohasset Historical Society will hold the first of its fall lecture series Wednesday, Sept. 21, at 7:30 p.m. at the society headquarters in the Pratt Building, 106 South Main St.. The guest speaker for the evening will be Thomas Hall, author of the book "TW Lawson: The Fate of the World's Only Seven Masted Schooner." Hall will present slides that tell the story of the birth, life and death of this unusual craft. Built in Quincy in 1902, the schooner sailed for five years before being wrecked on the Isle of Scilly in 1907.

A native of Scituate, Thomas Hall researched the vessel thoroughly. He interviewed relatives of the survivors, dug through archives and dove on the wreck of the ship in his quest for historical accuracy. He has presented his findings at lectures throughout New England and in the United Kingdom and appeared on the BBC in the documentary, "The Wreck of the Lawson" in 2001. This event is open to the public as well as the historical society membership. There is no charge for the program and light refreshment will be served. For additional information, call the Cohasset Historical Society at 781-383-1434

'The Patch' is back

Beginning Oct. 8 through Halloween, from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. daily, the prolific pumpkin patch at Wheelwright Park on No. Main St. in Cohasset, better known as "The Patch," will again abound with pumpkins and all the trimmings. Sale proceeds benefit Cohasset Appalachia Service Project which will be making home repairs in impoverished areas of Kentucky this coming June, 2006.

Free health screenings

Sunrise Senior Living of Cohasset will hold a Fall Health Fair on Wednesday, Sept. 21, from 2 to 4 p.m. Services will include screenings for blood pressure, bone density and weight in conjunction with the Norwell Visiting Nurse Association and the Senior Network. Strecker Eye Care Center will be available for eyeglass adjustments and cleanings. To reserve a time call 781-383-6300. Refreshments will be served.

Art Center sponsors day trip to MOMA

The South Shore Art Center in Cohasset is sponsoring a day trip to New York City and the Museum of Modern Art Saturday, Oct. 22, leaving the art center by motorcoach at 6 a.m., and arriving in New York City by 10:30 a.m.

Fall is an ideal time to visit the "Big Apple" and explore the magnificent MOMA, home of the world's preeminent collection of modern and contemporary art. Visitors will be on their own to spend time in the newly renovated museum, enjoy lunch in the city, and depart in the early evening.

Cost of $125 includes transportation, admission to the museum, lunch, and a light dinner served aboard the motorcoach, on the return trip home. To reserve a space call 781-383-2787.

Slide talk Sept. 28 on Rainsford Island

"Rainsford Island: Resort to Reformatory," a slide presentation lecture by Boston Landmarks Commission archeologist Ellen Berkland on the archeology and history of Rainsford Island in Boston Harbor, will be given on Wednesday, Sept. 28, 1 p.m., at 3 North Main St.. Admission is free and open to the public.

From a farm, summer resort, quarantine hospital, almshouse and a boy's reformatory to eventually an abandoned 11 acres, Rainsford Island in Boston Harbor has served many since its 1636 occupation by Edward Rainsford. City archeologist Berkland will explain how one archeological field season and extensive documentary research shed light on the fascinating history of Rainsford Island. In addition to a review of archeological and historic evidence, the presentation examines the ways in which the island has served Boston for decades.

ASP meeting Sunday

Gearing up for their 19th trip, Cohasset ASP will hold an informational meeting this Sunday, Sept. 18, at 8 p.m. in the Second Congregational Church next to Town Hall. There will be a slide presentation from this past summer's trip, followed up with details on this year's upcoming trip to Kentucky, June 24 through July 2. Registration forms will be distributed. Registration deadline is Oct. 1. Enrollment will be more carefully monitored this year. Beginning Sept. 19, forms and information will be available online at www.cohassetasp.org

Scituate also started an ASP group sponsored by First Trinitarian Church. Call 781-545-5300 for information.

Grand Opening of the Pumpkin Patch on No. Main St. sponsored by Cohasset ASP will be on Friday, Oct. 7.

Cohasset Elder Affairs offers activities and critical services

Volunteers are always needed

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Cohasset is lucky to have a Council on Elder Affairs that is able to provide abundant programs with little funding. From the educational, to the physical, to the social needs of seniors— the CEA strives to ensure every topic is covered.

But the CEA would be nothing without the help of volunteers, and more are always needed.

One of the most important services the CEA provides are rides in the van to the local supermarket, doctors appointments, and on social trips around town.

"It is essential we keep this program going," said CEA Director Kathy Bryanton.

Every week, the CEA offers escort shopping for seniors and there is always a need for people to both drive the van and provide assistance in the supermarket. Seniors, who are not able to drive, may make the trip to the grocery store once per week and some of the items such as gallons of milk or juice or jugs of laundry detergent can be heavy and awkward to carry. Drivers or escorts could help out carrying the large items.

Bryanton said in addition, there are some Cohasset residents who are not able to make the trip shopping. The CEA will take a list and bring the food back for them.

"Many seniors don't qualify for state home care, but they're very frail," said Bryanton, adding outreach coordinator Carol Barrett is constantly asked for support by seniors who wish to stay in their own homes.

"I see people who may have lost a loved one and now live in the family home by themselves. Maybe the family is at a distance or there is no immediate family, and they need extra support," said Barrett.

However, it is extremely expensive to hire someone to provide that support, which is where Barrett said the CEA steps in.

"We want people to be safe and cared for in their homes and we get so concerned when there are such great needs," Barrett said.

Bryanton added while many people see the CEA as a recreational program, it's a service program that many seniors in town could not do without.

For those who are able to get up and about, the CEA offers many educational programs. In October, there will be information available about the upcoming Jan. 1 changes in Medicare. Programming will be offered Oct. 5 and 25, and the CEA has information packets available.

"We put information in the Vista (newsletter) but it is still very confusing for people," said Barrett, adding once a person retires "you can't just run to the HR department with questions."

Another program in the wings began Thursday and will run for the next 12 weeks. Made possible through a grant given by the Department of Public Health, seniors from the towns of Hingham, Hull, Weymouth and Cohasset will learn to make the change toward living a healthier lifestyle.

"We all come to the stage when bad habits influence our decisions," said Barrett, adding often seniors get into the habit of eating light meals and aren't getting their daily requirement of vitamins or let other habits such as smoking take over.

In addition, Barrett said new healthy habits will be formed through a medical safety program offered at the CEA. She said the majority of the 65-plus crowd is on some kind of medication and people sometimes don't remember if they've taken their pills and will either take more, or none at all — both of which can have terrible outcomes.

"You need a system in place. It's a lifestyle change to set up a safety program and it has to be taught," she said, adding the series will focus on various aspects of healthy living. Safety in the kitchen, preventing infection, and food storage safety will all be covered.

"There's a great deal of education that's needed," she said.

But the CEA doesn't just provide services for seniors, it also provides programming for their caregivers. A series will be held Oct. 5, 12, and 19 on ways the adult child can approach their parents' changing needs.

"A lot of us were brought up to take care of our parents during their golden years," said Bryanton, but added sometimes that is not an option. She said in some cases, adult children are in their 70s and are caring for parents in their 90s which is not easy. People need to be made aware of their options.

On the recreational end, the CEA provides luncheons, bridge clubs, book clubs, and special outings like the "Gilligan's Island" luncheon and boat tour held last weekend. The CEA has also hosted trips to Boston for the day which include lunch. There is also the gourmet cooking class underway as well as a new Italian class, and even an antiques appraiser in the works. The CEA also offers chair yoga, a walking club, and other gentle exercise classes, to help seniors stay in shape.

There are medical programs offered through the CEA as well, including foot care clinics, blood pressure clinics, and opthamologists on hand to check and clean glasses.

"That's a free service to anyone," Bryanton said.

Above all, Bryanton said the CEA is a facet of the community that strives to help anyone it can. "People are always thinking about another person here," she said. Even with less than one half of one percent of the total budget allocated toward the services it runs, the volunteer help the CEA receives enables it to carry on with its mission.

"We want to be known as a town that helps each other," and if the volunteer support the CEA has received over the years is a gauge, Cohasset surely is.

To volunteer time or services to the Cohasset Elder Affairs, please contact the office at (781) 383-9112. The CEA is always looking to offer new programs, and anyone with a talent is welcome to begin something new. Volunteers are needed in every area, from van drivers to office help to kitchen help and social and physical activities.

Their real names are Martha Horsefield and John Coe, but we might know them better as Thurston Howell and wife Lovey from the TV show "Gilligan's Island." The senior center took a "three-hour-tour" of the harbor Saturday.

Some upcoming events at the CEA

October 5,12,19: Changing needs: How to help a loved one.

Oct. 5: How to approach changing needs — helping the adult child come to terms with a loved one's declining health and help the elder realize their changing needs.

Oct. 12: Where to live: Narrowing down the choices — What to look for when searching for quality facilities.

Oct. 19: Points to remember when visiting — Discussion around dispelling fears and anxieties when you visit someone with declining health or ADLS in nursing care to get quality time with them.

Programs include dinner which begins at 5:30 p.m., and the program runs from 6-7 p.m.

October 5: New Medicare 2006 Prescription Drug Plan

12:30-1:15 p.m. no fee - Discuss deductibles, co-pays, and out of pocket costs for the individual. New Medicare signup period begins in November.

October 25: Medex Blue Cross Blue Shield Changes

12:30-1:15 p.m. no fee - How Medigap and Medicare Advantage Plans work with Medicare. All welcome regardless of insurance coverage.

There are many more classes and events going on at the Cohasset Elder Affairs office. For more information on activities taking place, please call the office at (781) 383-9112. The CEA is always looking for volunteers.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Getting back in gear

While news never takes a hiatus — the quantity of news slows down somewhat over the summer months.

That should not be surprising given that town boards don't meet as often, schools are out, and lots of residents go away for a week or two. Other townspeople just like to kick back and relax and not think about "issues" or having to take the kids to dance lessons or hockey practice.

But with the start of school and the month of September well under way, that's all about to change.

The town budget season looms on the horizon. Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts meet, houses of worship resume their regular schedules, youth sports get into full swing along with myriad other activities for Cohasseters of all ages.

Here at the Mariner, we're pleased to be the vehicle through which our readers either "get the word out" or "find out about" everything from who's on the dean's list to what is the latest news about Greenbush.

But if you're on the delivery end of the news — in other words you want your club announcement or letter-to-the-editor in the paper — there are some simple "rules to follow."

We accept letters, news items and happenings by email, which is one of the most efficient ways to send your news. However, we receive dozens of emails everyday, so it's not a bad idea to follow your email up with a telephone call, just to make sure your message arrived safely and wasn't inadvertently deleted. Or better yet, just ask us to hit the reply button — so you'll get the message that we received your email on your computer. Attachments should be saved as word documents; photographs should be sent as jpeg attachments.

We still accept news by fax and the old-fashioned way, through the US mail, or dropped off here at the Cohasset Mariner office, 73 South St., in Hingham Square above the Cinnamon Bear. News items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street: just hand the envelope to whomever is behind the cash register and say it's for the Mariner.

News items should be as concise as possible and written in a narrative form. In other words, please write your news items in a "mini-story format" using complete sentences. Try not to send us flyers, which have to be completely reworded.

Here's the scoop on how to get your news in the Mariner:

Email: mford@cnc.com

FAX: 781-741-2931

In person: at the Cohasset Mariner office, 73 South St., Hingham Square, above the Cinnamon Bear.

Mail: The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham, MA 02043

Sports news email: mgoodman@cnc.com

Try to have your news to the Mariner by Tuesday afternoon for that week's issue, however, earlier is always better. We accept obituaries and letters to the editor until noon, Wednesday. If letters and obituaries come by email we can stretch that deadline a few hours.

We have forms available for wedding and engagement announcements with complete instructions at the Mariner office.

We welcome news tips and story ideas anytime.

Call Mary Ford, editor, at 781-741-2933; or staff reporter Samantha Brown, at 781-741-2935.

We couldn't do our job without help from the community. So let us hear from you!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Presidential grieving vs. resolve

TO THE EDITOR:

Many mothers are grief stricken in empathy with the mothers of our military casualties. Some feel that President Bush should have to meet face to face with bereaved families and feel the consequences of his policies.

What about the grief of the families bereaved from a long series of attacks by terrorists in the last several years, of which the 9/11 horror at the New York's Twin Towers is only the most remembered one! What about the grief of families of future casualties resulting from failure of the world's only remaining superpower (and favorite target) to have taken the war to the several nations where terrorism is based, but instead sat stupidly waiting to be hit again. And again! And again! What about the victims of naïve trust in sanctions, in diplomacy and in similar futile address to terrorists and their host nations? Weep for all the future victims of declining resolve, victims of sacrificing countless civilian and military lives in the long future rather than to have taken some military casualties in the near term.

There is no painless answer to terrorism!

Should we have limited our anti-terrorist campaign to Afghanistan, and not gone into Iraq? No, we have to demonstrate powerful and unflagging resolve in as many terrorist host states as it takes to force the remaining ones to abandon their support for terrorists, to defang them, to begin actively co-operating in preventing their resurgence. Unsatisfactory post war results in Iraq is not a valid argument to lose resolve and abandon the only policy that could achieve the long term goal of defeating terrorism. That President Bush never served in combat is irrelevant; neither did Franklin Roosevelt, who provided magnificent leadership in WW2!

As for requiring the President to visit the bereaved, not as a gracious act of sympathy, but a punishment for his policies, and to weaken his determination, how is that in the nation's interest? Presidents age visibly and terribly enough from the never-ending strain of their few years in office, coping with the whirlwind of events, competing pressures, powerful opponents; constantly agonizing over which of several answers to complex issues is the least of the evils, and so on. Need we erode his strength further by adding the burden of comforting the bereaved, especially if the motive is not really to comfort the bereaved, but to punish him and weaken his resolve to address the root cause of the tragedy?

Let him visit to the degree that his time permits from his awesome mountain of national and world issues, and as his own humanity urges him, and leave it at that! He is the man who has to make the awesome decisions for all of us!

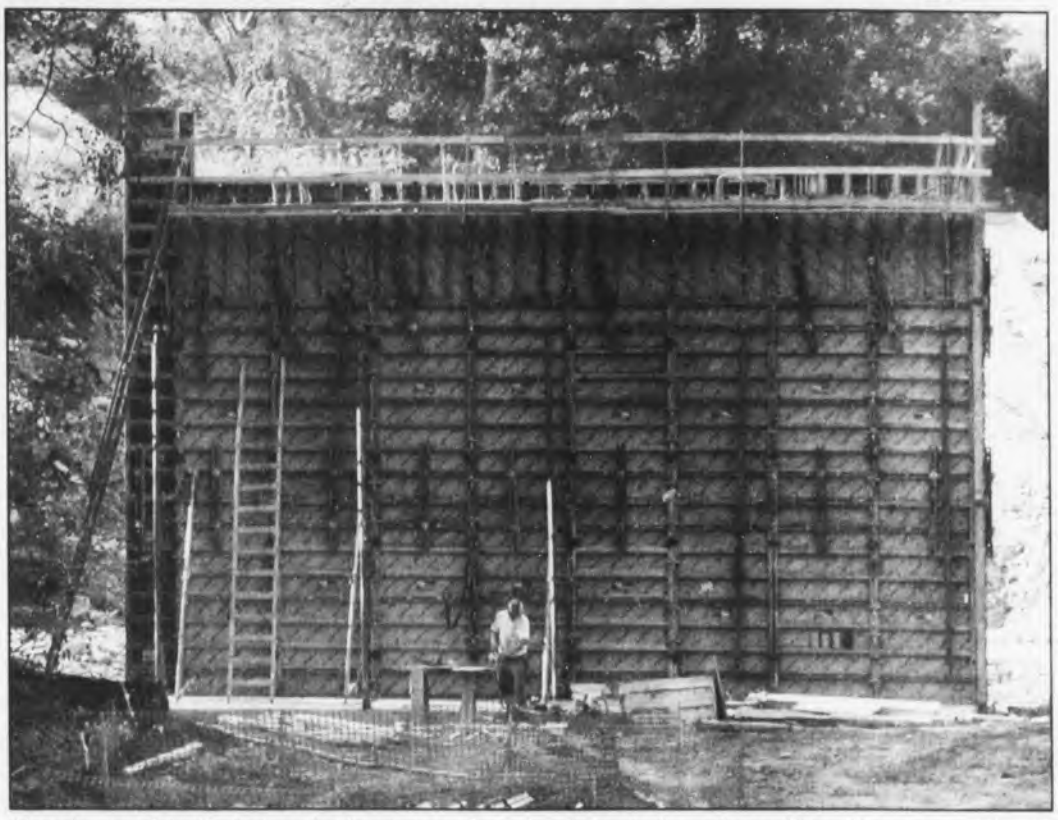
Rocky Lane bridge takes shape

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Recently, we encountered a very interesting situation in the area of Smith Place. As you may know, Smith Place will be closed as a through roadway when the train is completed. The only way anyone will be able to get to Smith Place will be via Cushing Road. We have been notified that there may be landowners in the Smith Place area who have deeded rights to cross the railroad tracks to Ripley Road.



We understand that shortly the MBTA will be doing some blasting in this area as well.

We would ask any residents in this area to check your deed to see if you might fall into this category. If so, please give us a call and we'll be glad to put you in contact with the appropriate people at the MBTA.

The Cohasset Greenbush project continues to roll through is construction phase. Work on the rough grading south of Beechwood Street is moving toward the Scituate Line.

Drainage ditches are being dug on one or both sides of the rail bed, depending on the design, to remove surface water from the track area. Some of these rough ditches will later be used for perforated pipes that will collect the storm water and some will be open ditches both of which are designed to collect and move the water to other areas. Periodically along the track way, new culverts are being installed to carry the water from one of the rail bed to the other. Thus, the rail bed will drain in a managed way to the wetlands or small streams that naturally carry the water away.

The Rocky Lane bridge now can be seen as the forms for the bridge abutment takes place. In fact last Friday, concrete was poured into the abutment by concrete pumping trucks. We understand that shortly the MBTA will be doing some blasting in this area as well. The picture shows these forms. Note their size in relation to the workman. This will give you an idea of the overall height of the bridge.

Note the size of the Rocky Lane bridge abutment forms in relation to the workman. This will give you an idea of the overall height of the bridge.

We have received the 90 percent drawings for Pleasant Street and Smith Place. (Note that the MBTA, through an oversight never submitted Smith Place drawings, so this is the first time we have had drawings for this area.) We encourage any abutters or tenants in the Pleasant / Smith Place area to give us a call to set up an appointment for reviewing the drawings so that we can collect any comments and forward them to the MBTA. We have approximately one more week to collect your comments.

HEALTH NOTES

Protect yourself from mosquito bites

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Eastern Equine Encephalitis (EEE) is a mosquito-borne viral disease which, as the name suggests, occurs in the eastern half of the US. Horses can become infected with, and die from, EEE virus infection.

Because of the high case fatality rate (about a third of the people who get the disease die), it is regarded as one of the more serious mosquito-borne diseases in the United States. Further, it is estimated that 35 percent of people who survive EEE will have mild to severe neurologic deficits.

EEE virus is transmitted to humans through the bite of an infected mosquito. The main EEE transmission cycle is between birds and mosquitoes. Several species of mosquitoes can become infected with EEE virus but the most important mosquito in maintaining the bird-mosquito-bird transmission cycle is Culiseta melanura. Culiseta melanura larvae overwinter in various stages of development. The eggs are laid in still water as found in boats or rafts on the surface of the water and there are several generations per year. The immature stages are found in tree root cavities in freshwater hardwood, red maple and white cedar swamps. This habitat makes control of this mosquito very difficult. The females feed primarily on birds.

Since the strain which carries EEE prefers well defined areas like hardwood swamps, avoidance is, perhaps, one key to safety from contracting the virus.

Symptoms range from mild flu-like illness to encephalitis (inflammation of the brain), coma and death.

As to incidence, there have been 200 confirmed cases in the US from 1964 to the present with an average of four cases per year. States with largest number of cases are Florida, Georgia, Massachusetts, and New Jersey. Human cases occur relatively infrequently, largely because the primary transmission cycle takes place in swamp areas where populations tend to be limited.

The greatest risk groups are residents of and visitors to areas with an established presence of the virus, people who engage in outdoor work and recreational activities, and persons over age 50 and younger than age 15.

Prevention

Although a vaccine is available to protect horses, there is no licensed vaccine for human use and there are no effective therapeutic drugs.

Since the strain which carries EEE prefers well defined areas like hardwood swamps, avoidance is, perhaps, one key to safety from contracting the virus.

People should also avoid mosquito bites by employing personal and household protection measures, such as using insect repellent containing DEET, wearing protective clothing, taking precautions from dusk to dawn when mosquitoes are most likely to bite, and controlling standing water that can provide mosquito breeding sites.

Control

Although spraying is now being considered in Massachusetts, hopefully the idea will be abandoned, since spraying is largely ineffective and we are late in the reproductive cycle of the mosquito and simple safeguards such as the use of DEET offer far more protection.

Land foundation to buy 30 acres

Most to remain as open space

The Cohasset Land Foundation, Inc., has entered into a Purchase and Sale Agreement with Osborne Ingram, providing a 12-month option to purchase approximately 30 acres of undeveloped land between South Main Street and Rte. 3A. Most would be preserved as open space. To obtain economic viability, about 20 percent would be devoted to commercial and/or residential development.

The mission of the non-profit Land Foundation, founded a year ago, is to acquire land, essentially at market rates, that might otherwise be subject to commercial development, and develop only that portion needed to recover costs, while preserving the remainder as open space or for other public use.

Thus it helps implement the Cohasset Master Plan of 2003 and maintain the character of the Town, while supplementing the Cohasset Conservation Trust, which relies on donated land and on funds donated to purchase land. This approach has been successfully implemented for many years in Lincoln, Mass.

"I see this as constructive disposition of the land my father, George Ingram, purchased in 1922, because I share the goals expressed by the Cohasset Land Foundation, and I believe its membership has the experience, competence and public spiritedness to accomplish those goals," Ingram said. "I expect that the portion to be preserved as open land will be named in memory of my father."

Current trustees of the Foundation include: Richard Avery, Tom Callahan, Murray Campbell, Jack Keniley, Frank Neer, Glenn Pratt, Wayne Sawchuk, Rick Swanborg, Gary Vanderweil, David Weltman, and Michael Westcott.

Input is welcome, and may be directed to Mr. Avery, Chairman, (781) 383-6043.

Trivial injustice in Roberts case

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth, a president best known by the initials FDR nominated a 51-year-old senator and former police court judge from Alabama named Hugo Black to the Supreme Court. Some Republicans thought he was a little too liberal but this was 1937 and he was confirmed with few problems.

The investigation of his background was such that only after he had taken his lifetime seat on the bench did we discover he had been a member of the Ku Klux Klan for three years back in the 1920s. He explained that, as a young lawyer just starting out, he would be facing Alabama jurors who were members and it might just help his case.

He went on to serve 34 years on the court and the former Ku Kluxer's vote in the court's 9-0 decision in Brown vs. Board of Education helped to touch off the civil rights movement that ended official racial segregation in the United States.

I mention this to show how the Senate's process of advise and consent has changed --- and not necessarily for the better --- in the past 50 or so years. If today's media and His Majesty's Loyal (?) Opposition had been turned loose on Hugo Black in 1937 he wouldn't have lasted long enough for the Senate to open hearings.

Take the current nominee, John Roberts. The word is out: If you can't get something real on him, then bury him in trivia.

The Washington Post recently carried a story in which it was noted that he had crossed out the words "Civil War" and substituted "War Between the States," the Southern version, in a speech, meaning, of course, he is chomping at the bit for a chance to wipe out 140 years of racial progress since Abe wrote the Emancipation Proclamation.

And did you hear about the joke he once made about housewives becoming lawyers? Well, his "housewife" is a lawyer and she even took time out from her busy court day to stand on the stage with him when he was appointed. She even brought the kids. And his son. Did you see what he had on his feet? Saddle shoes! God help us all!

The Roberts hearings are shaping up to be the most exciting event in the nation's capital since the day someone discovered that Justice-to-be Clarence Thomas had once checked out from Blockbuster a video called "Long Dong Silver" and had conferred with a female underling named Anita Hill on the subject of pubic hair on a Coca Cola can.

That led a Boston Globe columnist to propose (seriously, I suppose) that if Thomas were turned down by the Senate, Hill, then a law professor at Oklahoma, should be nominated in his place because "Hill's experience is broader and more distinguished."

"She even does him better on humble beginnings," the column continued. "Thomas had no running water until he was 7. She was 13 before she lived in a house that had a flush toilet."

I didn't have running water until I was 8. Maybe George should have picked me instead of the guy whose kid wears saddle shoes.

New principals are interviewed

Our Town kicks off its second season with a brand new show on Monday, Sept. 19 at 9 p.m. This edition will provide an opportunity to viewers to get to know Cohasset High School's new Principal Joel Antolini and new Middle School Vice Principal Beth Strenala.

On Thursday, Sept 29, co-hosts Mark DeGiacomo and Pat Martin sit down with guest Al Moore, chairman of the Cohasset Planning Board, who will discuss current issues confronting his board.

Look for the details of all other future shows in the Cohasset Mariner.

Catch Our Town on Mondays at 9p.m. or Tuesdays at 9:30p.m. and Thursdays at 8:30p.m. on Comcast Channel 10. Stay tuned Cohasset and stay informed!

No EEE found in Cohasset but precautionary measures urged

Ohio, and upstate New York. The virus infects birds and is spread by mosquitoes that travel from bird to bird.

The virus is transmitted to people through a mosquito bite. The mortality rate is approximately 50 to 70 percent, with survivors frequently left with disabling mental and physical problems. The first case of EEE in Massachusetts was recorded in 1938.

According to a fact sheet issued by the state Department of Public Health, the first symptoms of EEE are a high fever of roughly 103 to 106 degrees as well as a stiff neck, headache, and a lack of energy. The symptoms typically begin to present themselves 10 days after a person has been bitten. Swelling of the brain is the most dangerous symptom. The disease worsens quickly and some patients go into a coma within one week.

The DPH says there is no cure for EEE and all doctors can do is treat the fever and ease the pressure on the brain.

To keep from attracting mosquitoes, both the DPH and mosquito board say it is imperative to eliminate any standing water around the home where mosquitoes might breed. The DPH says mosquitoes will begin to breed in any puddles of standing water which has been present for more than four days. Simple steps the DPH says homeowners can take include:

• Dispose of or regularly empty any metal cans, plastic containers, ceramic pots, and other water holding containers (including trash cans) on your property.

...it is imperative to eliminate any standing water around the home where mosquitoes might breed.

• Pay special attention to discarded tires that may have collected on your property. Stagnant water in tires is a common place for mosquitoes to breed.

• Drill holes in the bottom of recycling containers that are left outdoors so that water can drain out.

• Clean clogged roof gutters; remove leaves and debris that may prevent drainage of rainwater.

• Turn over plastic wading pools and wheelbarrows when not in use.

• Do not allow water to stagnate in birdbaths; aerate ornamental ponds or stock them with fish.

• Keep swimming pools clean and properly chlorinated; remove standing water from pool covers.

• Use landscaping to eliminate standing water that collects on your property.

Tradd said while there have not been any cases of EEE found in town, there have been some dead birds which have tested positive for West Nile virus. According to the DPH, West Nile is transmitted to humans by mosquitoes, and in the most severe cases, can cause death. However, most people infected recover on their own.

Cohasset Middle High School principal Joel Antolini said at the Sept. 8 school committee meeting he would be in touch with the Plymouth County Mosquito Control board regarding any mosquito control precautions the schools should take, including whether school grounds should be sprayed.

He said as of last week, students at his school had been educated on EEE and were given the option of applying bug spray before heading outdoors for physical education class or after-school sports. He said students in his school are old enough to know whether they and their parents feel it is appropriate to use bug spray.

"This is an issue we're very concerned about," he said, adding last year, while serving as Principal of Holbrook Junior-Senior High School, a student passed away from EEE just after school started.

Tradd said at this time, spraying has not been planned for the area. Once the first frost hits, it will kill off all the mosquitoes and take away any worry for residents.

For more information, please contact the board of health office at (781) 383-4116 or visit the Plymouth County Mosquito Control web site at www.plymouthmosquito.com, or the state Department of Public Health web site at www.mass.gov/dph. Readers can also learn more about EEE in this week's Health Notes on page 11.

Honoring those who serve the nation

the George H. Mealy Post #118 off Summer Street. He said the Cohasset Police Department, where he serves as dispatch supervisor, has been supportive about accommodating his schedule.

"It takes a lot and you need to have a boss and people behind you that realize your dedication," he said. "If it wasn't for them, I wouldn't be where I am."

Military veterans and those on active duty are eligible to become members of the American Legion, and in turn, their sons and grandsons may become members of the Sons of the American Legion. The two groups, along with the American Legion Auxiliary, which the women participate in, make up the "Legion Family." In Cohasset, that term is very fitting as Wigmore serves as Commander of the local Sons of the American Legion, his wife is the president of the American Legion Auxiliary, and his father, Steve, is the Commander of the American Legion.

Wigmore is no stranger to taking the leading role. He previously served as the National Chaplain for the Sons of the American Legion.

As Chaplain, Wigmore attended the dedication ceremony of the National World War II Memorial in Washington, D.C., in May 2004. "It was one of the best things I've ever done," he said.

While there, Wigmore said he had the opportunity to speak with veterans, some of whom were Pearl Harbor survivors. He said he couldn't believe the number of men who were dressed in their old uniforms, holding up signs with the names of the ships they had been assigned to, looking for anyone they used to know.

The participation was outstanding that day, he recalled. Wigmore said the Sons of the American Legion provided chairs, drinks, and an air conditioned tent for veterans, along with television screens to broadcast the dedication for those who were too far away to see it up close.

"It was incredible," he said. "The whole national organization shined that day."

But what was an added bonus for Wigmore, was the special role he held at Arlington National Cemetery prior to the World War II Monument dedication.

Every year, the Legion runs the Cohasset Memorial Day parade with the help of the local Veterans of Foreign Wars post. In preparation for the day, Wigmore and a few other members of the Legion put flags on veterans' graves and patriotic wreaths at the squares around town.

However, unbeknownst to him, his wife Deirdre approached one of the commanders in charge of putting up the flags at Arlington Cemetery for the dedication, and they agreed to let Wigmore help out.

"It was quite an honor to do that," he said, adding the flags are always installed by military personnel in uniform.

With his new position, Wigmore said one of the new initiatives he will be involved with is working to pass a Constitutional amendment against flag burning.

"I'm for the rights of everyone, but I don't like to see the flag burned in protest. It's a slap in the face (to those who have risked or lost their lives to protect the country)," he said.

Wigmore will also be working to raise money for the National Emergency Fund and working for increased benefits for veterans. He will also work on the local level to help promote the Legion's various activities, such as scholarship programs for students, and the National Homeless Veterans Task Force to ensure onetime soldiers are taken care of.

"You've got to remember the parts these guys played in serving their country," he said.

Sandy Beach tests are back on track

Although Sandy Beach was closed for a few days due to high levels of enterococci bacteria in the water, subsequent testing has shown levels are back to normal.

Robin Lawrence, who is president of the Sandy Beach Association, said the levels were only high for one day.

"Tara (Tradd of the board of health office) took samples of the water Thursday (Sept. 8) and the results came back Friday and they were well below what they had been," said Lawrence. Initial testing was conducted Tuesday, Sept. 6, which found bacteria levels at 136. Swimming is prohibited in waters with levels higher than 104.

While Lawrence said no one knows for sure what caused the spike in the levels, his theory is that wind and currents carried water over from the harbor. The Sailing Club and Bassing Beach are currently closed due to high levels of enterococci.

Lawrence said this is the first time he, or anyone else, can ever remember Sandy Beach being closed for swimming.

For more information on beach closures, please contact the board of health at (781) 383-4116.

OUR WORLD

The moment we have all been waiting for has finally arrived! Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum off Sohier Street [behind the library] is about to celebrate its Grand Opening with an amazing exhibit that was created by the World Wildlife Fund.

On Sept. 25, from 11 a.m.- 4 p.m. Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum will present the Brooks Thomsen Singer Annual Memorial and a Sneak Preview of Biodiversity 911: Saving Life on Earth.

Admission for this event is $10 per person and includes all of the following activities and programs: storytelling with Diane Postoian, former executive director of the Looking Glass Theatre; Gary the Silent Clown, one of the original and best known clowns on the EastCoast; La Cupula, a popular Latin Rhythm group made up primarily of MIT graduate students from Mexico and Central America; The Jonathan Pascual Quartet, an internationally acclaimed Spanish Flamenco ensemble that includes music, dance and percussion — with children and audience participation; Pembroke School of Performing Arts, student performance of original choreography in honor of Brooks and children everywhere; and a chance to spark your creativity by building your own recycled work of art! Don't miss this chance to celebrate while we raise financial resources for maintaining our incredible new exhibit. Annual memberships at various levels will also be rolled out on this special day.

Then on Oct. 2, from 11 a.m.- 4 p.m. ..."drum roll please . . . ." the formal Grand Opening of Biodiversity 911: Saving Life on Earth, a lively exhibition created by the World Wildlife Fund! Discover the story of biodiversity using science, humor and creativity while actively participating with this hands-on exhibit for all ages. This day is dedicated to all the hard working volunteers who brought this museum to life and to all families of the South Shore who will benefit from this incredible educational family resource! Admission will be free for members or $5 per person. Activities through the day will include face painting, arts and crafts, a moment to recognize students of the South Shore Charter School who developed the tree house décor surrounding the lift shaft, two presentations by Animal Adventures with a wide array of creatures for us to meet and musical performances by Jim Armstrong and friends.

For more information visit www.ourworldcgdm.org or call 781- 383-3198. We look forward to sharing our excitement with you at both of these great events!

Big school check is good news for Cohasset taxpayers planned to cut back by more than half, from about $52 million to $20 million, the annual amount it would put toward school building project grants to free up money for special education and other programs in a weak economy. That meant Cohasset would have had to wait 10 years in stead of five to start receiving payments on the state's 60 percent share for its school projects.

Tuesday's event at the spacious Deer Hill School library for the $19.7 million check presentation that included a personal visit from State Treasurer Tim Cahill was clearly reason to celebrate.

"I'm the lucky beneficiary to what you have accomplished," said Deer Hill Principal Keith Gauley, who was filling in for Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh who could not attend due to an illness. "I came in three years ago to a brand-new building. Thank you from the bottom of my heart for what you have done."

Cahill said the check represented 75 percent of the state's contribution with the remainder to be paid upon completion of the project audit.

"You've waited long enough for the money, another 10 minutes wouldn't hurt," quipped Cahill, who was about 10 minutes late for the 9:45 a.m. ceremony.

Town, state and school officials join in the check presentation celebration Tuesday morning. From left are, Susan Spofford (whose husband Rob Spofford chaired the school building committee), School Committee vice chairman Alfred Slanetz, David Chase of the building committee, school committee members Pam Wilson and Adrienne MacCarthy, Town Manager Bill Griffin, Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed, Finance Director Michael Buckley, state Treasurer Timothy Cahill, state Rep. Garrett Bradley, state Sen. Robert Hedlund, Scott Collins of the building committee and Deer Hill Principal Keith Gauley.

"It's an example of state government doing something that works."

— State Sen. Robert Hedlund

He explained under the old School Building Assistance Bureau, the town would have had to wait until 2009 or later for reimbursement, which would have been paid in yearly checks through 2028.

The new Massachusetts School Building Authority was established in 2004 after legislation passed both the state Senate and House of Representatives and was signed by Gov. Mitt Romney.

This summer the MSBA issued $2.5 billion in special obligation bonds to help pay for school construction costs. The bonds are backed by one penny of the state sales tax. Receiving the money up front enables towns like Cohasset to carry less debt and saves on interest and borrowing costs, Cahill said.

Buckley explained the old program would have reimbursed Cohasset with 20 annual payments or 5 percent of the reimbursement each year from 2009 through 2028.

"Therefore, we would have had to borrow the full project cost," he said. "We also would not have been able to issue permanent bonds until 2008 or 2009, and who knows what the interest rates will be then."

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, said the legislation behind the MSBA was an example of good government.

"It's an example of state government doing something that works," Hedlund said.

Bradley said state officials put "politics aside" to get this accomplished.

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said Tuesday's check was significant beyond the dollars "that will result in a tremendous tax saving for the people of Cohasset."

"The importance of today has to do with promises made," he said. Koed explained Town Meeting approved appropriating money for the projects on the belief that the state would live up to its commitment to reimburse the town in a timely manner.

"Michael Buckley looked at some obscure language at the Department of Education web site that gave us warning," he said.

Soon thereafter officials from Norwell, Pembroke, Cohasset and Hull, who were joined by Hedlund and Bradley, trekked to the DOE in Malden to air their concerns but were sent packing after only six minutes.

Subsequently Hedlund and Bradley garnered support of other legislators and worked to change the system. Cohasset officials met with the governor and launched a letter writing campaign alerting other towns about the issue.

Selectman Rob Spofford, who served as chairman of the School Building Committee, could not attend the event Tuesday because he was out of town. He said Cohasset can be proud of the school projects.

"On a personal level receiving the lion's share of state reimbursement brings a true sense of closure to my tenure as chairman of the School Building and Facilities Committee," Spofford said Wednesday. "More importantly, however, I hope that receiving this money brings all of Cohasset a sense of fulfillment that we came together as a community with foresight on the right projects at the right time. I believe the results speak for themselves — buildings which will serve all of Cohasset for generations."

Flash back: Prior to the passage of the School Building Authority legislation that established the independent Massachusetts School Building Authority under Treasurer Cahill, the Department of Education oversaw all school construction in the state. The wait list of projects ballooned from 50 schools in 1983 to more than 425 in 2003 overwhelming the program.. So at that time the state froze any further projects. Since last October, the MSBA has distributed more than $525 million in checks for 61 school projects; all wait list projects will be fully funded as of January 2008.

State Treasurer Timothy Cahill puts his "John Hancock" on the $19.7 million check as state Sen. Robert Hedlund, left, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, right look on. Hedlund and Bradley led the charge for the legislation creating an independent school building agency that is overseen by the treasurer's office.

Economic development committee is appointed

The board of selectmen has appointed four residents to serve on an economic development committee, including Chuck Hurd, 18 Jerusalem Road Drive, Thom Powers, 25 Powers Lane, Gabriel Gomez, 59 Highland Ave., and Peter Brown, 38 Atlantic Ave. A member of the planning board will serve as an ex-officio member of the committee.

The committee will meet for 12 weeks, and at the conclusion will present its findings to the board of selectmen. The board will accept other residents who are interested in participating. Residents who are interested in planning commercial growth for the town should contact the selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105, or send a letter of intent and a resume to Town Hall at 41 Highland Ave.

Golfers off to 3-1 start

CHS is in the hunt for SSL title

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

It's early, but the Cohasset High golf team again finds itself in the thick of the South Shore League race.

There is currently a tie between three teams - Cohasset, Norwell and Harwich - that have 2-1 league records.

In their first match of the season last Wednesday, the Skippers defeated Norwell - the defending league champs - 28-26 at the Clippers' home course, Scituate Country Club.

"That was a big win for us," said coach Torin Sweeney. "We had never beaten them before."

Cohasset senior Kevin Barber was the match's medalist, as he shot a 38 to defeat Norwell sophomore standout Cody Cavicchi. Fellow senior Mark Bouchard shot a 40 as the number-two man in Cohasset's lineup, and won his match 6.5-2.5 (each team sets a lineup of their top six golfers, with the team getting a point for each hole won).

"Kevin has been playing very well; he's one of the best players in the league," Sweeney said. "Bouchard has answered the challenge up playing the number-two spot. He was fifth or sixth last year, and he's been playing well."

Also impressive against Norwell was junior Zach Murray, who shot a 39 to handily defeat his Clippers opponent, 6.5-2.5. Sophomore Charlie Czerkawski tied his match.

The emergence of Murray and senior Chris Bryan have been pleasant surprises for the Skippers so far this year, mostly playing at the third and fourth spots, respectively. At the five-spot is Czerkawski, who has won some key holes for his team.

"That was a big win for us. We had never beaten them before."

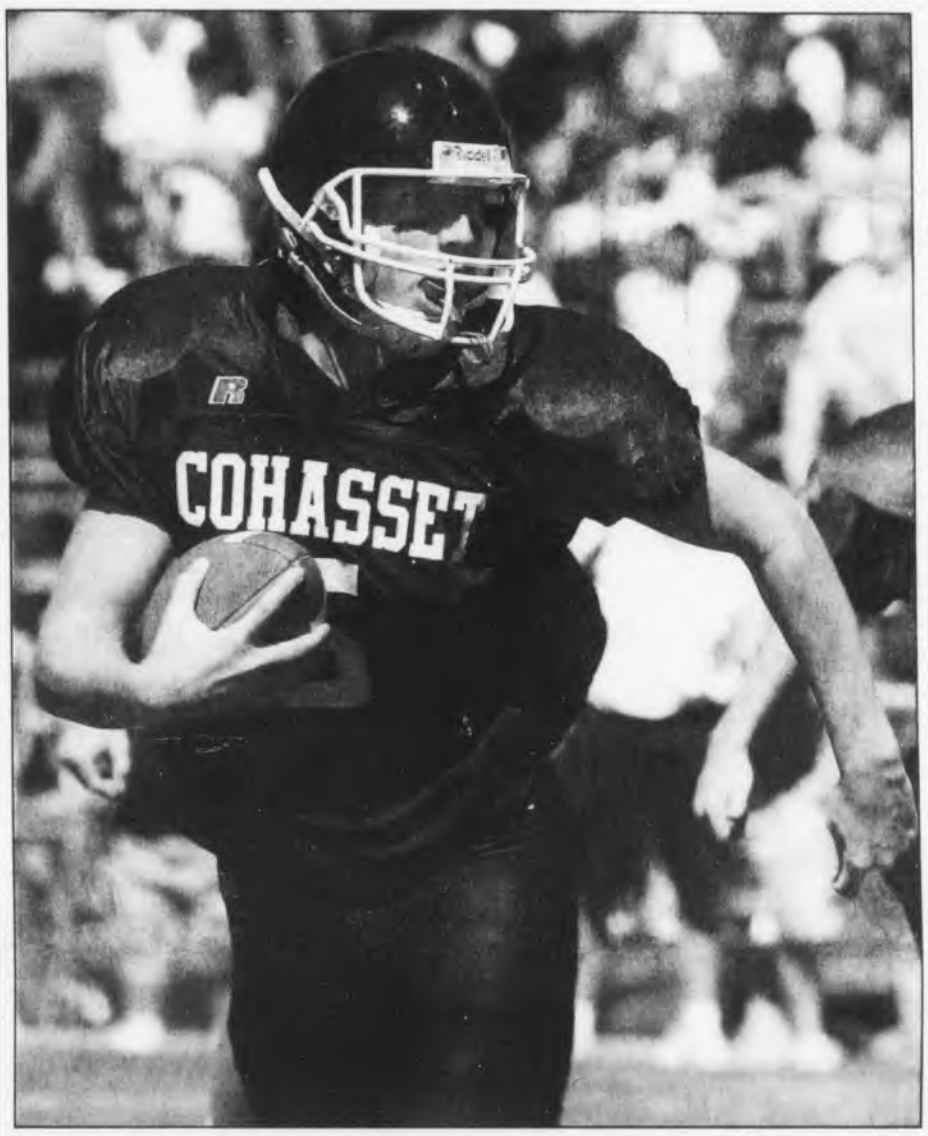
Senior Mike Devlin and freshmen John Sturino and John Wade round out Cohasset's top golfers so far. In the Skippers' lone loss of the year so far (30.5-23.5 against Harwich), Devlin scored a 5-4 win.



The Skippers' most recent match came against Mashpee, a close 27.5-26.5 victory. Barber, Bouchard and Bryan all won their matches, with Czerkawski tying.

Cohasset has a critical rematch with Norwell Tuesday afternoon at the Cohasset Golf Club.

Skippers look strong in win over Nantucket

Cohasset's Anthony DiPaolo scrambles to his right on a broken play in the first quarter of the Skippers' 27-8 win over Nantucket on Saturday. The junior tossed two touchdowns in his varsity debut at quarterback.

COHASSET - Anthony DiPaolo admitted after his team's 27-8 win over Nantucket on Saturday he was nervous in the opening minutes of his first varsity start.

Try telling that to the Whalers defense, who saw the Skippers' junior quarterback complete two touchdown passes in a 1:40 span in the third quarter to put away what had been a close game.

With Cohasset leading 14-8 with three minutes to go in the third quarter, DiPaolo lined up under center. Nick Camby facing a second-and-12 at the Nantucket 38. He rolled out to his right and looked like he was going to scramble until junior wideout Fletcher Smallzel got behind the Nantucket secondary.

DiPaolo threw the ball on the run, and Smallzel was waiting under it in the end zone for six.

"Their cornerback blitzed, so I put the stiff arm on him to buy some time," DiPaolo said of the play. "Then I just saw Fletcher open in the back of the end zone, and I went for it."

Arguably the most important play of the game came on the ensuing kickoff. Senior Robert Murley's kick rolled just past the 20-yard line; Nantucket suffered a brain cramp and failed to pick it up. With the live ball in front of him, senior captain David McKenna

What's better than the Sox beating the Yankees?

Well, actually, nothing.

But a strong start for the Cohasset Field Hockey team should produce a few smiles.

A 1-1 tie in Norwell last Thursday appears to be nothing special at first glance. But when you consider last year's disappointing outcome, many improvements can be observed.

First, let's look at the defense. Head coach Deb Bostwick noted great improvements in foot speed and backfield agility. She seemed especially excited about the Skippers' ability to drive the ball up to the midfielders and forwards.

"Transitions became a problem for us last year," Bostwick noted. "This year, our defense really works well together to get the ball out of our zone."

She noted co-captains Katherine Whoriskey, Remy

Boys soccer comes up short against Hanover

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

STAFF PHOTO/ROBIN CHAN

Skippers goalie Prescott Busk reaches up to collect a corner kick during Friday's match with Hanover. The senior made several good saves, but Cohasset could not get on the board in the 2-0 loss.

COHASSET - Last Friday's boys soccer game between Hanover and Cohasset had the feel of a college match.

There was some physical play, jawing on the field; even a couple yellow cards were brandished.

All that matters in the end is the final score, however, and the visiting Indians - behind goals from the Shea twins, Ryan and Matt - came out on top with a 2-0 victory.

Hanover head coach Jim Sylvia was pleased with the season-opening win, but acknowledges his team has a long way to go at this early point in the season.

"Anytime you can start out with two points against a good non-league opponent, you're happy with that," Sylvia said. "At the same time, we have a lot of loose ends to tighten up. They are mostly discipline-type things; there was a lot of complaining [at the referees] today."

Cohasset head coach Rob Leary, meanwhile, did not sound like a losing coach.

"Hanover was the Patriot League champions last year, and here is little Cohasset hanging with them," Leary said. "Our team never gave up; I've never been so impressed with a loss before."

Unlike their opponent, the Skippers came into the match with a game under their belts, having defeated Bridgewater-Raynham 4-2 the prior Tuesday. The team surely entered this match on a high from that win, but Hanover took care of that by dominating possession early in the game.

Ryan Shea nearly scored in the second minute, flicking the ball over his head with his back to the net and having the shot go just wide. He and Matt, both juniors, had their share of chances in the opening minutes, and Ryan finally made one count in the 21st.

Winger Max Terlecki (sp?) won a 50-50 ball in the Cohasset third to get the ball to the edge of the box on the right side. Brian Wheeler controlled it and crossed to Ryan Shea, who put in a nice, easy header for a 1-0 lead.

That's all Hanover would need, thanks to their defense, in particular senior stopper back Bryan Rodday. Rodday is a tall, imposing presence in the middle of the field, and has the skills to match his size, as evidenced by the fact that he took most of his team's free kicks and corners.

John Nolan, Bill Riley, Ben Ellison, Peter Fanning and Dan Neville all contributed to Hanover's defensive effort.

The Indians went into the half with a 1-0 lead, an advantage that would have been larger if not for the play of Cohasset senior keeper Prescott Busk. Busk made an especially notable save on Ryan Shea in the 29th minute on a point-blank shot in the area.

The Skippers' few offensive threats in the first half came from senior striker Aidan Buick, who often dropped back into midfield to help work the ball up the pitch. A good low cross late in the first half from senior Ben Libby also forced Indians keeper Mike Dion to make a nice play to scoop up the ball.

The beginning of the second half was similar to the first half: Hanover controlling play, with Busk pressed into a lot of action and Cohasset defenders covering a lot of ground to stop attacks. Skippers senior defender Trevor Brady played an especially effective game, making several tackles and doing what he could to start counter-attacks the other way.

In the 55th minute, however, Hanover got a critical insurance goal. Ryan Shea had a free kick from the left flank about 30 yards away from goal. His effort bent to the edge of the goal-mouth and found brother Matt in stride. Matt hit a one-time volley with his left foot and found the net.

Not a bad start for a duo that are among the Patriot League's best players.

"Ryan and Matt are players that will get double-teamed a lot, and they can't let it get to them," Sylvia said. "They just have to go out and play their game, and they did for the most part."

After Hanover's second goal, Cohasset played with a renewed sense of urgency, and it was Hanover who were on their heels for the game's last 20 minutes. A Buick free kick in the 60th from the left side found a running Sam Roth, who unluckily headed it off the post.

Roth had another golden chance six minutes later from the edge of the area, only to have Nolan clear it off the line.

Senior Sam MacDonald and Busk, who played on offense for the final 10 minutes, both had quality chances toward the end. Dion, however, was up to the task and completed his clean sheet.

Lee, senior Ellen Tarpey, and sophomore Sally Meehan for their consistency on the defensive.

Moving up the field, the middies showed more of the same: improved quickness. This time, senior Christie Muir, co-captain Katie James, and co-captain Mia Lieb-Lappen controlled the field well and all showed new and improved stick skills.

On offense, seniors Brooke Allen and Erin Liddell (one goal) and junior Sheelah Scott (one assist) worked very well together.

"All-around, our team has improved this year," Allen said. "Our offense looks strong, and the defense is extremely solid. We need to work at capitalizing on scoring opportunities on corners."

In general, the Skippers seem to have a LOT of new wind in their sails.

As senior co-captain Remy Lee put it, "We have a whole new attitude. Everyone wants to win and we're all willing to work for every point. I feel this kind of desire can only give us success."

Bostwick agreed with her players' optimism.

"I was impressed with a lot of things I saw out there," she said. "We need to brush up on some spacing issues and continue to work on shooting accuracy. Overall, we have a good attitude and some strong skills."

Cohasset's skills will be put to the test this week when they face off with Notre Dame Academy (Wednesday) and Carver (yesterday).

Hurricanes Baseball Team wins the Bronze medal in South Carolina at the Triple Crown Regional Tournament

The Hingham-Hull Hurricanes capped their successful 2005 season by coming in third at the Triple Crown Eastern Regional Tournament held in Myrtle Beach, South Carolina in August. There were over 75 teams representing 20 different states in Myrtle Beach to compete in the Eastern Regional Tournament and the Hurricanes are the first team from Massachusetts to finish in the top ten, let alone third, in the history of the tournament.

The team flew down to Myrtle Beach the day before the start of the tournament coming off a great run at the Jimmy Fund Baseball Tournament in Quincy in which they made it to the finals. Unfortunately, due to a schedule change with the Jimmy Fund Tournament, the Hurricanes were unable to play in the Championship game against the Quincy Babe Ruth World Series Team because they needed to be in South Carolina for the start of the tournament.

With twelve teams in their division, the Hurricanes played four games of pool play. The Hurricanes played against the NY Indians from Oakdale-Bohemia, NY, the Lightning Bolts from Long Island, NY, the Virginia Sting from Fredericksburg, VA and the National Storm from Branford, CT. The team's starting outfielders Tyler Pari, Nick Perry and Pat Creahan made it very difficult for any team get a hit into the outfield. With Tyler Pari's ability to cover a wide swath of centerfield and the strong arms on all three, opponents found it very difficult to get more than a single.

Being the well conditioned and disciplined team they are, the Hurricanes easily made it into the single elimination championship bracket. The Hurricanes were seeded third after the pool play setting up the first playoff game against the NY Panthers in the quarter finals. The team made it through the quarterfinals with several great defensive plays at second base by Charlie Cifrino and Matt Henriksen at third beating the Panthers 3-2 getting to the semifinal game against the CT Storm.

The Hurricanes pitching rotation is known around the south shore for their depth and they all came through in the tournament. The team starters are Chris Basler, Eric MacIver, Sam Koonce, Tyler Pari and Tyler Eddy with closers consisting of Jake Bennett and Nick Perry and recently added to the staff KC Murphy. Catchers Cifrino, Mike Larsen and Jack Walker added more depth behind the plate.

The Hurricanes were unable to win the semifinal game against the Storm even though when they had played the Storm in pool play, the Hurricanes easily defeated the team 14-0. Koonce pitched a two hitter in that game. With the loss, the Hurricanes played for the Bronze medal against the Long Island Lightning Bolts, winning the game by a score of 10-5.

The Thunder from McKinney, Texas beat the Storm in the championship game to win the tournament.

With the win, the Hurricanes have qualified for the Nationals being held in Las Vegas in October. The Nationals include teams from all over the country that placed in their regional tournaments.

The players that traveled to South Carolina for the tournament were Pat Creahan, Jake Bennett, Chris Basler, Sam Koonce, Charlie Cifrino, KC Murphy, Mike Larsen, Tyler Eddy, Eric MacIver, Jack Walker, Tyler Pari, Nick Perry and Matt Henriksen. Danny Battista, Chris Williams and Luke White were unable to make the trip with the team. The team is coached by Mike Cifrino and Mike Koonce along with Mike Larsen and Peter Henriksen as score keepers and base coaches.

pounced on it to give the Skippers possession once again.

Cohasset made the Whalers pay for their mistake three plays later. This time, DiPaolo rolled to his left and found junior receiver Nick Zappalo at the 5. Zappalo did the rest from there, running around a defender and turning the play into a touchdown that got the Skippers supporters on their feet. Murley's extra point made it 27-8 with 1:16 to go in the third, and the game was essentially out of reach for the visitors.

It was a nice sequence for DiPaolo, who said he needed to calm his nerves after the game's first couple drives.

"Mentally, you're up here [at the beginning of the game]," DiPaolo said with his hand raised over his head. "I had never played much time at the position before. But it's fun; I enjoyed it."

Aside from a couple mistakes, Cohasset head coach Tony Rolfe said he was impressed with his new quarterback.

"I thought he ran the option pretty well, and his composure was outstanding," Rolfe said. "As a quarterback in our system, he is asked to do a lot of things, and he handled them well today."

The passing game was well supported by a running attack that amassed 181 yards on 32 carries, and helped Cohasset maintain possession for 15 out of 20 minutes in the first half. Leading the way in that department was senior Shane Dorian, who did not play football last year.

Despite that, Dorian looked smooth, hitting the holes with no hesitation in his step. He ran for 97 yards on 16 carries, and scored the game's first two touchdowns on tough runs of one and eight yards.

"He's not a big kid; he disappears behind our linemen, and all of a sudden, he pops out," Rolfe said of Dorian. "He just sees the field so well."

Sophomore Kyle Pinkus (six carries, 35 yards), DiPaolo (six for 33) and sophomore fullback P.J. McCaw (four for 16) also solid days for the running game.

About the only downer for the offense was an injury to sophomore right tackle Jake Cuneo, who appeared to hurt his left ankle in the first quarter and did not return to the game.

While the Skippers will need Cuneo healthy if they are to execute their offense the way they want to, coaches and teammates were impressed with the game turned in by his replacement, sophomore Cliff Musto.

"Cliff did an awesome job, especially for someone who hadn't played the position very much," DiPaolo said. "He did everything we could've asked him to."

The defense - who suffered a key injury of their own when junior linebacker Colin Conway went down in the first half - had their struggles in the second half after a solid first. Nantucket fullback John O'Mara was a force on carries up the middle and screen passes from quarterback Geddes Paulsen (9-for-15, 139 yards).

O'Mara rushed for 115 yards and caught for 51 more. Rolfe said afterward the two plays were "probably the two plays we prepared the least for," mainly because it was the first game of the year.

"Those first games are always terrifying," Rolfe said. "Of course, the other team is in the same boat, because they don't know what we're going to do either."

Playing well defensively for the Skippers were junior tackle Justin Alexander and senior end Zack Etkind, who spent his share of time in the backfield pressuring Paulsen.

All things considered, it was a solid first effort for the year, but one the defending South Shore League champs are hoping to improve upon coming into tonight's big game.

"We have a lot of work left to do," DiPaolo said. "We have a tough game coming up [tonight at home against Archbishop Williams]. Today, everything clicked. Hopefully, we can do it again."

Cohasset Field Hockey Club starts first season

The Cohasset Field Hockey Club began its first season this week at the Deer Hill School.

The new team is open to any interested players from grade 6 on up. The team practices from 4 to 5:30 p.m. on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday. Games will be played against other area club teams as well as local private school teams.

With 55 high school girls trying out for just two teams this season it was apparent to Cohasset Field Hockey Booster's organizer Michael Condon that Cohasset had a real opportunity to grow its field hockey program.

"I thought to myself, we have to step in and help out," said Condon. "Under normal circumstances, a field hockey team would have 15 or 16 players; the coach was in a tough spot. We thought there would be 15 or 16 girls without a place to play."

Condon and his wife Shirley started the booster club several years ago and felt like the Cohasset Field Hockey Club was the next logical step.

"Many of the towns we play against and many similar towns have extensive youth programs," he said. "I was always impressed with just how competitive Cohasset field hockey was even without a strong feeder program."

He credits varsity coach Deb Bostwick for that.

"Deb is like a one man band; she does it all" Condon said. "She is able to motivate these girls to play beyond their abilities."

The Club originally hoped to field a team with the girls who would not be able to play on the high school team, but Bostwick was able to include virtually all of the 55 girls who tried out. This gave Condon the chance to develop the feeder program he wanted.

"Our goal is to have a 6th, 7th and 8th grade team. We will also sponsor an indoor program this winter for 6th through 12th graders," stated Condon.

Registration will continue through next week. Interested players are urged to show up at practice with shin pads and cleats; loaner sticks are available. Registration is $50; forms are available at practice, Town Hall or at the Middle School office. Michael Condon can be reached at 781-383-6895.

SPORTS NOTES

Cohasset Youth Baseball Major League tryouts

The tryout for the 2006 CYBSA major league baseball season will be held on Saturday, Sept. 24th at Chase Field at 1 p.m.

All boys and girls who are 10, 11 or 12 years old as of April 30, 2006 who wish to play in the CYBSA major league baseball division and who are not currently on a CYBSA major league baseball team are eligible and invited to tryout.

All eligible 12-year olds who try out will be assigned to a major league team; however, all eligible 12-year olds must attend the tryout to be assigned to a major league team. Players should register at Barnes Field beginning at 12:30 p.m. The tryouts should run till approximately 4 p.m.

This will be the only opportunity to try out. The rain date will be Saturday, Oct. 1. If the tryout is rained out, it will be announced on the CYBSA web site at cybsa.org on the morning of Sept. 24.

Questions may be directed to either Liam O'Connell at 781-383-0538 or Nancy Froio at 781-383-1897.

Signups Sunday for Flag Football

Hingham Flag Football signups, open to residents of all towns, will be held this Sunday, Sept. 18 at Gratta Field (across from Stop & Shop) from noon to 2 p.m. for ages 5-13. The cost is $65 per child with a $130 family limit.

There will also be registration forms at Hingham Rec and Cohasset Town Hall. For more info call 781-383-9122or e-mail lchase12345@yahoo.com.

Baseball club looking for players

Henry's Baseball Club in Waltham is looking for players between the ages of 17 and 40 to play in its current fall ball league.

Games are played on Sunday's at 11 a.m. The club plays year-round, with a winter indoor league and spring competition also.

The club is also looking for coaches, helpers and volunteers. For more information or to sign up, call Henry at (781)891-0621.

Seadogs tryouts

The first in a series of clinic/tryout sessions for the nationally renown Seadogs/AAU Travel Team Baseball Program's 2006 season will be conducted Sept. 10-11 at fields in Braintree, Norwood and East Bridgewater.

The Seadogs will field seven teams in 2006:10-and-under through and including 16-and-under. Players are selected from a series of clinic/tryouts held throughout this fall. The cut-off day to determine proper age group for 2006 teams is July 31, 2006.

The 2005 Seadogs enjoyed their most successful season, highlighted by the 12-and-Under team's Silver Medal performance in the AAU National Championships.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

CHS civics class eager for community service

The CHS civics and community service class has 51 students enrolled this semester all eager to make a difference in the community. Organizations looking for support and assistance from student volunteers, may call teacher Jack Buckley at Cohasset High School, 781-383-6100, ext 274, or email jbuckley@cohassetk12.org.

Adult volunteers are also needed to help supervise some very worthy projects. Those ready to lend a hand, meet some highly motivated and responsible students, and work together with youngsters to improve their community are invited to join in a very worthwhile venture.

PAC workshop Oct. 4

Is your child struggling with organization? The PSO - Parent Advisory Council, is sponsoring a workshop Oct. 4, titled "Mission: Organization!" Presented by Sara Ward, a speech pathologist specializing in cognition and attention, the workshop teaches organizational skills for children. The class is helpful for parents of special needs students as well as any child struggling with organization. It will be held at The Osgood School, 210 Sohier St., at 7:30 p.m. All workshops and presentations are free.

Piano lessons resume

Priscilla D. Daniels, professional pianist and teacher of pianoforte, resumes her lesson-schedule at her Beach Street home in Cohasset. Her personalized instruction has attracted students who have had careers in music, while others play just for pleasure.

Daniels is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music of Boston, magna cum laude. She is a member of Alpha Chi Omega, national sorority, and Pi Kappa Lambda, honorary professional society. She has taught in Swampscott, Lincoln, Norwood, and currently in Cohasset.

As part of each lesson she incorporates music theory, harmony, rhythm study and expression. She encourages her students to improvise and compose, and strives to communicate a love and appreciation for the fine arts through the medium of the piano.

For more information call 781-383-1487.

PSO fundraiser benefits programs

The Osgood and Deer Hill PSO have launched their Innisbrook Gift Wrap Fundraiser this week. There are two wonderful catalogs this year filled with the quality, stylish gift wrap Innisbrook is known for, but also available are many neat gift ideas and candy and chocolate. New this year is an opportunity to purchase from a wide selection of magazine subscriptions. As always, 50 percent of all sales go directly to the PSO and orders can be placed with students, at the schools or online.

This is an important fundraiser because the PSO uses the proceeds to fund worthwhile programs at all the schools. At the Osgood and Deer Hill schools, the proceeds help fund Character Education Programs, Classroom and Library grants, Curriculum Enrichment Programs and Teacher Appreciation events.

The Character Education Programs enhance our children's learning by providing opportunities to teach difficult social skills such as problem solving, conflict resolution and dealing with bullying and peer pressure. The Curriculum Enrichment programs provide hands-on educational programs specific to each grade to supplement and complement existing curriculum. An example of the Teacher Appreciation events is the Welcome Back Breakfast being held for teachers and staff at each school this week.

Please support our children and schools by participating in this fundraiser. Catalogs can be viewed at the Osgood and Deer Hill schools, the Town Hall, the Library Community room and the South Shore Community Center Nursery School. The fundraiser will end on Oct. 3. If you have any questions or would like to place an order, please call Mary Jo Blackington at 781-383-0626.

Call for volunteers!

Volunteers are sought to help assist two Community Service students from Cohasset High School with a service project down at the harbor. The project will benefit the rowing club, CMI (Cohasset Maritime Institute) and will take place during school hours throughout the next few months.

Tasks include basic boat repairs, maintenance, and boat house repairs.

Any volunteers please contact Prescott Busk at 617-515-2719.

OBITUARIES

Richard A. Chase

Formerly of Cohasset

Richard A. (Dick) Chase, age 72, passed away at his home in Canyon City, Ore. on Saturday Sept. 3, 2005.

Dick was born Feb.13, 1933 to Hester and Arthur Chase in Cohasset. He grew up in Scituate and attended schools there. Dick was drafted into the Army in 1952 and served as a medic at Letterman Army Hospital in San Francisco. While in the service he went to work for Dudley Perkins/Harley Davidson Company doing body and fender work. From 1954 to 1958, he raced motorcycles for the Harley Davidson factory all over the country and won many of his events. In 1960, he received certification as a welder. In 1961, he went to work for Pacific Elevator Company as an elevator constructor building elevators mainly in San Francisco. In 1971, he moved to Canyon City, Oregon and became a logger. He worked for Hines Co. for eight years before going out on his own. He had his own logging and welding business.

Dick was an avid shooter — rifle, pistol, and trap, and loved hunting of any kind. He belonged to the Grant County Shooting Sports Club, The Oregon Hunters Association, a life member of the NRA and North American Hunting Club. He loved racing of any kind. He raced go-karts in Idaho for many years and won the Idaho Short Track Championship three years in a row. Dick was a member of the John Day Elks Lodge.

Richard A. Chase

Dick married Nancy Curran in San Francisco on Oct. 14, 1961. He was preceded in death by his mother Hester Fish Chase and father Arthur M. Chase. He leaves his wife, Nancy of 43 years, son and daughter-in-law Eric and Shelly Chase of Fairview, Ore., and grandsons Tyler and Brady Chase. His daughter and son-in-law Shae and Steve Speth, and grandchildren Trejan & Caitlyn Speth of LaVista, Neb.

Memorial Contributions can be made to Blue Mountain Hospice or Grant County Shooting Sports Club through Driskill Memorial Chapel, 241 S. Canyon Blvd., John Day, OR 97845

J. Raymond Gaffey Jr.

Naval architect and marine engineer

J. Raymond Gaffey Jr., 78, of Scituate and Pocasset, naval architect and marine engineer and former president and executive director of the Massachusetts Marine Trades Association, died at his home Sept. 8, 2005.

A veteran of World War II, he served as a first lieutenant in the U.S. Army.

He was a graduate of MIT, Class of 1950.

A lifelong sailing enthusiast Mr. Gaffey's career in the marine industry spanned six decades. His experience included stints with wooden and fiberglass boat builders including Boston Whaler, where he was general manager during its high growth years. He did design work with John G. Alden Inc. and Portsmouth Naval Shipyard. He was also a manager of the marine department at Merriman Bros. Inc., where he held patents on various items of marine hardware.

He owned and operated several boatyards and worked in developing numerous marinas including Tern Harbor, the early expansion of Hyannis Marine Service and the Marina at James Landing in Scituate. In addition he was owner and president of Gaffey Yachts in Cohasset Harbor. Later in his career he worked as a naval architect and marine surveyor both independently and in association with Robert Kershaw Inc.

A founding member and past commodore of the Blue Water Sailing Club he served on the race committee for many years. He was also a past commodore at the Scituate Harbor Yacht Club and the Satuit Boat Club and was a member of the Hyannis Yacht Club and the Hatherly County Club. He was appointed a member of the Governor's Boating and Recreation Vehicle Safety Advisory Board for several years.

He leaves his wife of 55 years, Jean (Coppinger); and his children, Joyce Ferris of Montpelier, Vt.; J. Raymond Gaffey III of North Hampton, N.H.; Martha Sawyer, Ann Madden and Thomas C. Gaffey, all of Scituate; a brother, Eugene E. Gaffey of Keene, N.H.; and 13 grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated in St. Anthony Church, Cohasset. Interment was in Cudworth Cemetery, Scituate.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers, memorial gifts may be made to Camp Ta-Kum-Ta, a camp for children with cancer, P.O. Box 576, Waterbury, VT 05676.

Alzheimer's expert shares new developments

Dr. Sanford Auerbach, associate professor of neurology and psychiatry at Boston University School of Medicine and chairman of the state Alzheimer Association's advisory committee, will speak on "New Developments in Diagnosis Affecting Patient and Family," Wednesday, Sept. 28 at 7:30 p.m., at Hingham Senior Center, 224 Central St. The presentation is sponsored by the Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore.

A behavioral neurologist, board member of ADSGSS, Inc., and long-time advocate for Alzheimer's issues, Auerbach will provide an opportunity for participants to ask questions on all aspects of Alzheimer's and care of Alzheimer patients.

Autumn equinox Poetry Circle and Labyrinth Walk

There will be a Poetry Circle and Labyrinth Walk at Old Ship Church in Hingham Wednesday, Sept. 21 at 7:30 p.m.

Each seasonal crossing time at Old Ship, the community is invited to spend an evening with poetry to honor gifts of the season and of times passing. In addition to walking the labyrinth, participants are asked to bring a poem of the autumn equinox season or a poem offering hope or comfort. These will be collected and sent to an appropriate group in the Gulf Coast area. Refreshments will be served. This ceremony is open to all. For information call Elizabeth Torrey, 781-749-0543.

Kennedy, 7.
Diagnosed at age 8 1/2 months
The Facts About Juvenile Diabetes
- More than 1.3 million Americans have type 1 diabetes.
- Each year over 13,000 children are diagnosed with diabetes in the U.S.
- Type 1 diabetes strikes children suddenly, makes them dependent on injected or pumped insulin for life, and carries the constant threat of devastating complications.
- Type 1 diabetes is an autoimmune disease in which the body's immune system attacks and destroys the insulin-producing cells of the pancreas.

Horse play

'Cavalia' gallops into town for exclusive engagement

Quebec's Cirque du Soleil first achieved international fame in 1985 as a circus without animals. Two years ago, however, one of its founders, Normand Latourelle, decided it was time to let at least the horses back into the act. With his latest creation, "Cavalia: A Magical Encounter Between Horse and Man," — now at Suffolk Downs — Latourelle merges a troupe of 50 horses, including 25 stallions, with Cirque-style acrobatics, live music, and projected images for a show that explores the evolution of the horse.

Directed by Erick Villeneuve, "Cavalia" features not only horses, but also 32 artists, riders, acrobats, aerialists, and dancers, as well as musicians, a vocalist and even its very own "horse whisperer," Frederic Pignon, and his wife, equestrian Magali Delgado. Pignon's center-stage "conversation" with three unbridled horses offers some of the show's most charming, intriguing moments. It comes late in the show, however, after a long first half that even Mr. Ed would acknowledge bears a strong resemblance to a pretty traditional circus act. The lighting and music are amped up, for sure, but the horses circling the ring are a very familiar, if still striking sight. The riding — including Roman-style where one rider stands astride two horses with one leg on each - is thrilling, though, especially when judged against some uninspired acrobatics.

While the horses may look good with their long, flowing manes, the show itself could use some trimming. Nevertheless, even amidst the spectacle of humans bungee-jumping and attempting back flips on huge, rolling balls, with this many beautiful horses - including playful young colts and gorgeous Appaloosas and Arabians — the real majesty of "Cavalia" remains clear.

"Cavalia: A Magical Encounter Between Man and Horse" is being presented under the largest traveling Big Top in North America at Suffolk Downs (junction of Routes 1A & 145) through Sept. 25. For tickets and information, call 1-866-999-8111 or visit www.cavalia.net.

Broadway veteran joins local favorites in 'On The Twentieth Century'

Tony Award nominee Alice Ripley ("Side Show") will join a company of the South Shore and Boston's best and brightest musical performers — and a full on-stage orchestra — next week when Overture Productions presents a concert version of the musical "On The Twentieth Century" at Boston's Cutler Majestic Theatre.

"We have great, professional-level voices in this show. There is only limited dancing needed so more singers turned out for the auditions than usually do," explained Music Director Michael Joseph by telephone last week from Norwell's Company Theatre. "Productions like this afford local actors the chance to be seen by Boston audiences and to work with Broadway performers like Alice Ripley. Concert staging also allow actors and others in the the community to see shows that are not in the standard repertoire and to hear them in their entirety."

The 35-member cast - under the direction of onetime Quincy resident and former Broadway in Boston president Tony McLean - includes Company Theater favorite John King making his debut on a Boston stage. Also joining King and fellow Weymouth resident Joseph from the South Shore are Bridgewater's Jen Walker, Jacqui Duffy of Quincy, and Brockton's Steve Shannon, who is music director at Abington High School.

"Our company has come together to do this particular show for all kinds of reasons. Some auditioned because they enjoy working with me and others were looking for a chance to work with Tony, who is a real presence on the Boston theater scene. And most, of course, came out because they just love the show."

Based on the Ben Hecht-Charles MacArthur comedy, "Twentieth Century," and made into a 1934 feature film of the same name starring John Barrymore and Carole Lombard, "On the Twentieth Century" is the story of a perpetually broke theatrical producer who plots to convince his estranged lady love to star in his next musical. It was adapted for the stage by composer Cy Coleman ("Sweet Charity," "City of Angels") and the legendary team of Betty Comden and Adolph Green ("On The Town," "Bells Are Ringing") who provided book and lyrics. Under the direction of Hal Prince, the musical opened on Broadway on February 19, 1978, with a cast that included John Cullum, Kevin Kline, Madeline Kahn, and Imogene Coca. It earned Tony Awards for Best Book and Best Score.

"The show has a real bravura, comic operetta style which will really appeal to fans of Gilbert & Sullivan. It's just a classic example of great musical comedy with plenty of schtick and sight gags," says Joseph. "In our production, Tony has done some amazing things with lighting and other elements to suggest the mayhem and campiness that make this piece so much fun."

"On the Twentieth Century" is being presented by Deb Poppel and the non-profit Overture Productions at the Cutler Majestic Theatre, 219 Tremont Street, Boston, September 23-25. All proceeds and half of the tickets will be donated to a variety of Boston-based youth arts programs. For tickets and information, visit the Cutler Majestic box office in person or on-line at www.maj.org. Tickets are also available at Bostix or through Telecharge at 1-800-233-3123.

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127
GOING DIGITAL
If you are an audiophile, by now you have probably relegated your tapes and tape deck to the closet in favor of CDs or an MP3 player. The computer age has rendered music so clear that anything less than digitally mastered music is unacceptable to your ears. Happily, the same technology that radically changed the music industry has also revolutionized today's hearing instruments. Digital hearing instruments analyze incoming sound and convert it to a digital signal, which can then be manipulated according to the wearer's hearing levels and listening needs. After that, the signal is reconverted to analog form (sound waves) and delivered to the ears without producing the types of distortions that were commonly associated with analog technology instruments.
If you or someone close to you is considering a hearing aid, your timing couldn't be better. The digital revolution has vastly improved hearing aid features and sound quality without increasing their size. This combination of technology and cosmetic appeal opens up a whole new world of hearing possibilities. You can always rely on FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER to address your needs on a one-to-one basis. Our goal at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, is to find the most appropriate solution to each individual's particular hearing concerns. PH: 781-337-1144. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits, and Mass Health.
P.S. Wearers in many studies indicate a subjective preference for digital hearing instruments.

She's so fly

Women up for challenge of outdoor fishing adventure

By FRAN GOLDEN

SILLIKERS, New Brunswick, Canada -- I came to the Miramichi River here to catch "the big one." Probably a little optimistic given that this was my first foray into the world of fly fishing.

Yes, I've done the live bait thing before, felt the pull of the fish, known the excitement of trying to reel it in.

But those long fly fishing rods and the whole concept of flipping the line in the air kind of scared me. Not to mention the idea of standing in a moving river.

Still, I put myself in the hands of Upper Oxbow Outdoor Adventures, and its Ladies' Fly Fishing School program, in this rural Canadian town of less than 300, about two hours by car from the provincial capital of Fredericton.

At the rustic camp, we were greeted by our hostess Debbie Norton, a rugged yet maternal type wearing khaki shorts and shirt with a knife on her belt and Birkenstocks on her feet -- hippie meets hunterwoman. Debbie, a guidance counselor at the regional middle school/high school, owns the camp with her husband, Dale, but she is clearly in charge.

"I hope you're prepared to work hard," she said in a husky voice. "Just kidding," she added with a twinkle in her eye as she escorted us to the comfortable, three-bedroom log cabin we'd call home. It was built in 1956, "same year as me," Debbie said.

After a boiled lobster dinner, our hostess, who heads a local conservation group, gave us a brief lecture on "catch and release." Atlantic salmon come to the fresh water Miramichi from the Bay of Fundy in fall to spawn. They lay their eggs in late October. "Catch and release" means humans won't disturb growth of the population, Debbie explained. It's something she promotes but doesn't insist her guests do.

"Most catch and release because they are overjoyed there's a place in the world where they can catch Atlantic salmon and wouldn't hurt them for anything," Debbie said.

As for herself, "People think I'm nuts but I really love the little creatures." Still, she admitted she loves smoked salmon.

Enter Brett, 38, our fishing guide. He shares his last name Sillikers with the town. And he's a solidly built, woodsy guy (he also leads hunting expeditions for Woodchuck and Grosse) who can cuss, story-tell and smoke up a storm. Kim and I of course were immediately taken by him.

Our first lesson was in tying knots, first on cord and later on more challenging, thin leader. This lesson would have been a lot like Girl Scout camp except there was wine involved. As soon as I was handed a fly, the hooks decorated to look like insects that are used in fly fishing, I stuck my thumb.

Next day, we hit the river at a reasonable 9:30 a.m. (much to my delight fly fishing does not require you to get up at the crack of dawn) and I caught something on my very first cast -- the tall grass behind me. Outfitted in waterproof waders and special felt-bottomed wading boots, all provided by Brett, Kim and I spent several hours in about two feet of bourbon-colored water (darker than usual because of recent rains) in the Little Southwest Miramichi, right outside of our camp. I used a fly called a "White Winged Green Machine," chosen by Brett, later switching to a "Blue Smurf," because I liked the color (no one knows exactly why the fish go after the flies; the fish don't eat when they are in the river spawning). Neither fly hooked me "the big one," but by the end of our first session we at least caught a "good job," from Brett.

HERALD PHOTOS BY FRAN GOLDEN

Bonnie Wright casts her rod fly fishing in the Little Southest Miramichi River in New Brunswick.

Cathy makes a fly.

The casting motion was not as hard as I thought it would be. It felt kind of like cracking a whip, but gently, with grace. Try too hard and you wrap your line around your pole, or worse.

Brett insists his students wear a hat and sunglasses, and the reason becomes obvious when he lights up cigarette ("keeps the flies away," he said) and starts telling tales of fishermen who have found themselves, well, hooked. There was the guy with the hook in his cheek, another with one in his eye and another with one in his nose -- all the tales were told in gory detail (only the nose guy was unable to pull the hook out himself).

The stories made the time pass. So did my concentrating on not sticking myself.

Our burly guide said he likes to teach women best because "they listen." And his best ever fishing day involved a 69-year-old women who hooked six salmon, including a 22-pounder (those that were actually caught were released). "One fly, six fish, one pool," Brett said. "It was my best day. I got drunk that night." Just don't ask him to teach his school teacher wife. "You don't teach your own," he explained.

After a hearty steak dinner (country folk know how to eat) we drove to another stretch of the river for what they call here an "eve-nun" fish. And I CAUGHT A FISH. A salmon. Okay, it was a parr (baby salmon) about three inches long. And I didn't know I had caught it until I accidentally wrapped my line and saw it hanging (at which point I admit I shouted, "Holy S---. A fish.") The little guy was quickly released to continue his up river swim.

After a good night's sleep we headed about 35 minutes by car, a good part on dirt roads, to truly the middle of nowhere and a pool on the Sevogle River. Joining us this day was Bonnie Wright of Juniper, New Brunswick, who knows Debbie through conservation causes.

Wright is a true fisherwoman; she goes out daily, and admits, "Sometimes when you get the bug it kind of takes over."

It's the anticipation of the rush you feel with fish on line that gets you, she explained. We cast until our arms hurt.

Sure there's the pretty scenery, the being one with nature, the sound of water flowing down the river and lapping on the shore, and the occasional eagle soaring overhead or big flock of ducks splashing by. But it's the rush you crave.

Fishing with us, Bonnie got a nibble but nothing more. Kim and I would go home slightly red from the sun, but rush-less.

A day later I got an e-mail from Debbie. Bonnie had caught two Atlantic salmon. And continued her streak with one each the next day and the next. Right place, right time, and probably a little skill too.

If you go...

THE PROGRAM: Upper Oxbow Outdoor Adventures Ladies' Fly Fishing School is priced at $575 per person for a three-night package that includes airport pickup in Fredericton, accommodations, meals, guided instruction, equipment, licenses and a massage as well as taxes. The camp has three cabins, a dining hall with den and a soon-to-open six-bedroom lodge. Call 506-622-8834 or log on to www.upperoxbow.com.

GETTING THERE: Delta (www.delta.com) has nonstop, 55-minute flights to Fredericton, New Brunswick, twice daily.

Spraying plan gets canned

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Spraying for mosquitoes on school grounds to help bring down the risk of contracting eastern equine encephalitis will not take place in Cohasset.

The board of health has determined without any cases of EEE in or near the town, it cannot declare a state of emergency which would warrant spraying. In order for the board to authorize spraying, the town must first exhaust all other options, and a state of emergency must be declared.

"Once you get into an emergency situation, it's too late," he said. "If it were my child, it would be an emergency."
Health board member Robin Lawrence voting in favor of spraying

In addition, the board explained spraying would really only provide a solution for one day as it kills mosquitoes flying in the area at the time of the spray, but does not leave a residue to kill mosquitoes who fly into the area after the fact. The board said it felt students would be better off taking the precautions the schools already have in place, including using bug spray when outdoors.

The board held an emergency meeting Tuesday with health agent Joseph Godzik, middle-high school principal Joel Antolini and facilities manager Brian Adams to discuss the issue. The board voted 2-1 against spraying (members Steve Bobo and chairman Peggy Chapman voted against spraying while Robin Lawrence voted in favor).

Antolini had asked for the meeting at the request of School Supt. Denise Walsh. He said the superintendent wanted to spray the athletic fields and the grounds of the all three schools.

Share the road plan is idling

Selectmen want resident input on proposal

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The drive along Cohasset's coast is arguably one of the most beautiful scenic vistas in all of Massachusetts. But the hairpin turns on Jerusalem Road and its lack of a sidewalk even as it turns into Atlantic Avenue make it nearly inaccessible for pedestrians and cyclists.

Clark Brewer wants to change that – at for about a dozen days a year.

A member of the growth and development committee, Brewer is pitching a plan that would have motorists share the road with those on bikes or on foot.

On summer Sundays only, Brewer is proposing making the coastal roads from Black Rock Beach to the Town Common one-way, from noon until dusk. Vehicles would be limited to one side of the road, opening the other side up to pedestrian and bike traffic. Emergency vehicles would be allowed access to the roads at all times.

Historical society seeks home for antique trucks

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Selectmen have given the go-ahead to the Historical Society to begin investigating what it would take to renovate the small garage behind Town Hall to store and display a pair of restored Hand Tub Pumper fire trucks.

Glenn Pratt came before selectmen Tuesday, and explained the society is in possession of an 1865 pumper known as "Konahasset," restored in 1990, and recently acquired "Independence," a pumper and one of the original trucks acquired by the town in the 1860s. Currently, Konahasset is safely being stored in a private garage and is not being enjoyed by the town, and he worries the same will be true for Independence.

"We'll have two of these old historical pieces, but no one can see them," said Pratt.

When the society headquarters was in the Lothrup House, Konahasset was stored in the garage behind the building. However, when the house was sold and the society moved its headquarters to the Paul Pratt building on South Main Street, the truck had no place to go.

Interactive exhibit opens at museum

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

It's not hard for a young child to dream about what it would be like to walk in the canopy of a Sumatran forest. Or what it would be like to swim with the fish alongside a colorful coral reef.

All they need is a little something to spark their imaginations, and the new exhibit at the Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum has just the ticket.

The Our World Museum, located in the rear of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Ripley Road in Cohasset, will unveil its new exhibit, "Biodiversity 911: Saving Life on Earth," Oct. 2. Biodiversity is the variety of life on earth, and through the exhibit, children will take a closer look at ways they can help the earth's wildlife and natural resources through six kiosks, or learning stations, each focusing on a different environmental issue. Guided by friendly cartoon characters, children will learn ways they can proactively help the environment of the world they live in.

"I think it's going to be very good for families to see. It's an impacting exhibit which is geared for all ages," said Michele Bolduc, director of the Our World Museum.

Our World purchased the Biodiversity 911 exhibit from the World Wildlife Fund. The exhibit used to travel around the country, but will now be permanently featured in Cohasset. Bolduc said the exhibit is valued at $1.25 million, but the museum was able to purchase it for $40,000.

At the heart of the exhibit is the biodiversity theater. Here, guests watch a short film on biodiversity, produced by Aardman, the creators of Wallace and Gromit and the film "Chicken Run." The film takes place in a hospital emergency room where clay model animation creatures are being treated for a variety of ailments. The film introduces children to some serious issues such as deforestation, pollution, climate change and wildlife trade, in a friendly and approachable way with animated characters.

Bolduc said because the theater is so nice, she has begun working to coordinate special family movie nights which can take place in the theater space after museum hours.

The characters featured in the film — including soil worried it will erode from a lack of roots to keep it in place and a rhinoc-

Town's emergency management group 'making strides'

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

In his 20 years of serving as the emergency management director for the town, Arthur Lehr says a state of emergency has only been declared roughly 10 times. However, the 86-year-old North Main Street resident with much experience under his belt says he routinely goes through the motions to ensure everything is in place should disaster strike.

Lehr, along with deputy director Glenn Pratt, Police Chief James Hussey and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, make up the town's Office of Emergency Management. They meet fairly often to discuss ways to better prepare the town in case of an emergency, and are the "go-to guys" should anything ever happen in town.

The group came before selectmen Tuesday to provide an update on their roles and what any actions taken. Selectmen asked the group for an update in the wake of Hurricane Katrina, to ensure the board would know the role it is supposed to play during an emergency, as well as the chain of command.

As the director, Lehr takes ultimate charge during an emergency — which means a "state of emergency" must be called either at the state or local level. The board of selectmen can declare a state of emergency at the local level. Pratt explained the group operates under the Civil Defense Act of 1950 as well as the Homeland Security Act, which gives Lehr sweeping authority during an emergency — he can order everything from setting the prices for local merchants selling goods to taking control of property valuable to the efforts during a crisis.

"Although I'm supposedly the boss, I depend on all town departments," said Lehr, adding if the town knows a potential emergency is on its way, such as a blizzard or hurricane, he always contacts as many people around town as he can beforehand to touch base and keep the lines of communication open.

But Lehr isn't shy about using his power of authority. He said years ago, there was a situation where a number of wires had fallen down due to a storm. He said the town was not receiving any help from Mass Electric and the situation was becoming dangerous.

"It was my decision to shut the town down," he said.

Lehr said over the years, he has only really had to deal with emergencies dealing with weather. Since Sept. 11, everything has changed and he said he is learning the rules for terrorist attacks along with everyone else. Pratt said he is constantly amazed at the amount of information that comes into the office.

> "Every agency in town gets involved in some way."
> Glenn Pratt, deputy director of emergency management

To further help prepare, the town will be taking part in a mock drill Oct. 19. The town has hired an outside company to stage an emergency, and the town must respond as if it was really happening. Rescue teams will not know when the call is coming, or what the caller will say, but they must react quickly.

Chief Hussey said while the drill will be helpful for responders, it will also be beneficial for those in charge, such as himself and Town Manager Bill Griffin, who are both relatively new in town and don't have the historical knowledge others do.

During an emergency, communication is key and Lehr has all the passwords and codes which allow the town to contact and receive aid from the Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency. Lehr said in the past, he has contacted MEMA via ham radio, which is sometimes the only way to communicate. If land lines are down, cell phones can be an option, but if there is no signal available, which is the case in many places in Cohasset on a normal day, communication will suffer. Being on the ham radio network keeps people connected, he said.

Griffin said he will be working in the future to enhance the cell phone reception in town, as it can be such an important means of communicating.

The state is requiring every town have a certain number of employees certified in National Incident Command System practices, to ensure there are always people around who understand the protocol for handling an emergency situation. The town had 20 employees take the roughly three- hour test Wednesday morning. The test is taken online and Griffin said he had taken it Tuesday and passed. Some employees who will take the test include the DPW superintendent, members of the water department, the school superintendent, and the school business manager.

"Every agency in town gets involved in some way," said Pratt.

In addition, the town is always looking for volunteers to take on leading roles during emergency situations. People with writing skills who can handle public relations, people who can work heavy machinery, and people who are available just to answer the phones are always needed.

Due to the work the Office of Emergency Management has been doing, the town has been able to secure some grant funding — receiving two $12,000 grants from the Department of Homeland Security, the police department has received another $15,000grant, and the board of health has received two $5,000 grants. All will be used to help purchase protective equipment to be used in an emergency, and some was even used to purchase radiation detection equipment for the fire department. There is also $5,000 included in the town's budget.

"Real good strides are being made," to ensure the town is prepared as it can be, said Griffin.

To offer volunteer services during an emergency, please contact the board of selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105 with your name and contact information and someone from the emergency management office will get back to you.

Health board bugged about school cleanliness

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

The school buildings were not clean enough for board of health standards one week prior to the opening of school.

Tara Tradd of the board of health office, who conducts inspections prior to the start of school, said she began visiting the buildings Aug. 29, and in her travels, she found dead bugs, dust, and mold in various areas of the buildings.

Every year, Tradd goes through every single room in every school checking to ensure everything is OK for the first day of school. She said she often speaks with teachers who are setting up their rooms for the year to ensure there aren't any problems. She said it is a routine event, during which time she inspects for potential health hazards, including signs of water damage which could lead to mold. Because she inspects every room at every school, the inspections take place over the course of many days.

This year, Tradd said she did find some water marks in ceiling tiles which would indicate water damage, and she said there were many dead bugs in corners along with dust. She said there was a rug that was moist and harboring mold.

Facilities manager Brian Adams said the moldy rug has since been cleaned and is no longer an issue. However, he said what is an issue is the fact that One Source — the company contracted to clean the schools — is only required by contract to clean the floors during the summer months. All other cleaning is done by a school custodian. "We have one custodian in each building who cleans during the summer" he said.

Health board chairman Peggy Chapman said she would recommend the schools have One Source come in earlier to ensure the buildings are clean more than a day or two before school starts. This year school started on Sept. 6.

The discussion took place at the end of a meeting called to discuss potentially spraying at the schools for mosquitoes. Cohasset Middle High School Principal Joel Antolini had attended the meeting and said in regard to the cleanliness of the buildings, any administrator would like to have a full custodial staff all year round. "But with our resources, we have to do what we can," he said.

Adams noted this was his first summer overseeing the buildings and he has received a lot of feedback that this summer's cleanliness level was better than in prior years.

"You're probably right," said Chapman, noting in previous years, there were extensive amounts of dust in the buildings, which could have been partially due to the construction going on at the schools.

Board member Steve Bobo said even though the buildings weren't quite up to par, "I think everyone realizes the job you've been doing, in getting the cleaning and maintenance plan on track for the schools."

Tradd said she has not yet written up her report on the conditions of the school buildings as she had been told during the inspection she had come too early and the buildings were not yet ready to be inspected. However, she said she would be happy to go back to the buildings this week and work with Adams to solve any remaining problems.

Police arrest 12 during month of July

July was a busy month for the Cohasset Police Department. In all, there were 12 arrests, spanning many different crimes, including:

- outstanding warrants (three)
- unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle (two)
- assault and battery (two)
- operating under the influence of liquor (two)
- shoplifting (one)
- possession of a Class D substance (one)
- protective custody (one)

During the month of August, the police department investigated 12 motor vehicle accidents, four of which resulted in personal injury. There were 62 motor vehicle citations issued, totaling $1,400 in fines. Additionally, there were 55 parking tickets issued totaling $1,350 in fines.

The emergency dispatch center received a total of 1,165 calls for police services in August. Of those, 120 were emergency 9-1-1 calls.

August also saw four reports of breaking and entering, all of which involved motor vehicles. There were also two criminal complaints issued for the month.

Spraying plan gets canned

"Mosquitoes are on the property, but to my knowledge, no testing has been done in Cohasset," to indicate whether the insects are infected or not, said Antolini. "We're looking at this as a precautionary measure."

Chapman said as a registered nurse, years ago she took care of a patient who was infected with EEE. Ever since, she has been attuned to the cases noted in the area. Recently, three cases of people contracting EEE have been reported on the South Shore.

"There are two to four cases per year in Massachusetts on average," she said, adding there have already been close to that this year. "If I saw birds dropping at the rate I did three years ago, I'd think differently," she said, when West Nile Virus, another disease spread through mosquitoes, was running rampant. However, she said this year, where it is very late in the mosquito season, "I don't think it's an emergency."

Chapman also pointed out the first hard frost, likely to take place in mid-October, will kill off virtually all mosquitoes in the area, thereby taking away the threat of contracting EEE. While the disease will still be a concern until the first frost, using bug spray and eliminating standing water around the schools or around homes will help keep mosquitoes at bay, experts say.

Encephalitis refers to any condition in which there is swelling of the brain. According to the Plymouth County Mosquito Control board — the agency responsible for addressing mosquito problems in close to 30 towns along the southern Massachusetts coast including Cohasset — EEE is a rare disease caused by a virus that has been found along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of the United States as well as Michigan, Ohio, and upstate New York. The virus infects birds and is spread by mosquitoes that travel from bird to bird.

The virus is transmitted to people through a mosquito bite. The mortality rate is approximately 50 to 70 percent, with survivors frequently left with disabling mental and physical problems. The first case of EEE in Massachusetts was recorded in 1938.

Member Robin Lawrence said in his view, spraying would be a preventative measure. "Once you get into an emergency situation, it's too late," he said. "If it were my child, it would be an emergency."

Lawrence said in his opinion, having some sort of protection for some period of time is better than having no protection at all.

But Chapman noted spraying as a preventative measure does not meet the criteria the board is bound by, as an emergency situation must already be in effect.

Godzik noted the spray is strictly used for killing adult mosquitoes. Any larvae in the area will not be affected and mosquitoes will be able to fly into the area after the spraying has taken place. "You'd have to spray daily for it to be effective," he said, adding only those mosquitoes present during the spray will be killed. The board as a whole felt it would be better to continue taking precautions than spray and give the impression mosquitoes are no longer a threat, when really, only the mosquitoes present during the spray will be killed.

Antolini said he had spoken with a representative of the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Board who had indicated that while spraying the chemical resmethrin will only kill those mosquitoes present during the spray and there is no guarantee there won't be a re-infestation, it will reduce the risk by eliminating the adult population of mosquitoes that have had a blood meal. He said the larvae that live will not be infected with the virus.

However, Chapman said the potential health hazards of spraying should also be considered. She said studies have not been conducted on the long-term effects of spraying on humans. She said from the information she has read, if spraying did occur, she would recommend children with neurological conditions or asthma not go outside at the schools for 48 hours. In addition, the chemical is dangerous to fish, and she said the water runoff from the fields at the high school flow into Lily Pond, the town's drinking water supply.

But Godzik said he did not think the runoff would be a problem as there is virtually no residue left behind after the spraying takes place, as it is water soluble. "I'm not a big fan of pesticide spraying, but if it can prevent something, it's probably OK," he said.

Antolini said his preference would be to spray the property.

"I worked with a student two years ago who is no longer here because of EEE. Statistics are one thing, but it's entirely another when you know the person," he said. Antolini added he would hate to have something similar happen in Cohasset, and he would like to take every precaution possible. But Chapman said doing everything possible would result in spraying every day. Bobo noted spraying could incur a big cost as well.

"Of course, money is no object when you're talking about kids," said Bobo, but added if the spray is potentially harmful to the children, as well as surrounding water bodies, and applying bug spray daily while outdoors could potentially be a better solution, the town might be better off to forgo spraying.

In light of the vote, cans of bug spray will be available to students at all three schools during outdoor activities, including sports games, but using the spray will not be mandated. Spray will be made available for fans watching the games as well. Parents should also be aware the schools will be sending home a fact sheet on EEE and children will continue to be educated on the virus in their classrooms.

For more information, please contact the board of health office at (781) 383-4116 or visit the Plymouth County Mosquito Control web site at www.plymouthmosquito.com, or the state Department of Public Health web site at www.mass.gov/dph. Both sites have tips on ways to eliminate mosquitoes from your own backyard.

Common symptoms

According to a fact sheet issued by the state Department of Public Health, the first symptoms of EEE are:

- A high fever of roughly 103 to 106 degrees
- A stiff neck
- Headache
- Lack of energy.

The symptoms typically begin to present themselves 10 days after a person has been bitten. Swelling of the brain is the most dangerous symptom. The disease worsens quickly and some patients go into a coma within one week.

School fiscal affairs make grade, so far

By Samantha Brown
SAMBROWN@CNC.COM

Fiscal 2006 has been underway for two months, but for the school department September brings students and expenses which set the budget in motion.

In his first presentation to the school committee, new business manager David DeGennaro said while the schools have not spent any money in a significant amount of areas, he cautioned that legal expenses and contracted services are both nearing the 75 percent expended threshold.

"We have $12.6 million budgeted until it is voted at Town Meeting," said DeGennaro, but added all his calculations are based on the budget the town and schools have agreed upon at roughly $12.3 million.

The Annual Town Meeting in April approved a total operating budget of $31,886,824, with the school's portion set at $12,629,447, contingent on a $400,000 Prop. 2-1/2 override passing at the ballot box. The override was to be used to subsidize the school budget. However, the override did not pass muster with voters at a subsequent ballot-box vote, and the budget now needs to be amended to make up the $400,000.

It will take another Town Meeting to formally approve the amended budget without the $400,000, and the Special Town Meeting is slated for Dec. 5. Until that formal vote takes place, the town and schools have agreed to work with figures which cover the difference. The school department was required to make up $285,065, bringing its total budget figure down to roughly $12,344,382.

DeGennaro said at this point, the school department has expended 75 percent of the legal budget under the school committee/superintendent's office line item. The fiscal 2006 amended budget allocated $20,000, and as of Aug. 26, $15,002 had been spent. The legal costs have been incurred for special education cases as well as collective bargaining.

In addition, $7,030 of $9,500 budgeted for contracted services in the business office has been spent, but DeGennaro joked that is his fault. Joe McDonald had come on board temporarily after the resignation of Karen Park, and DeGennaro worked with McDonald for a time before becoming a full-time employee to learn the ropes. Seventy-four percent of the contracted services budget has been spent.

Aside from those two line items, DeGennaro said the school department is in good budgetary shape. None of the other line items have even expended 40 percent, and some have not expended anything at all. Some line items which have spent are:

- Middle school/high school: textbooks, materials, instructional supplies — 38 percent expended.
- Middle school/high school: equipment maintenance and supplies — 34 percent expended.
- Middle school/high school: principal office supplies/contract service —15 percent expended.
- Osgood school: utility/electricity — 13 percent expended.
- Osgood school: equipment lease — 12 percent expended.
- Special needs student services: summer school services/materials and supplies — 12 percent expended.
- Middle school/high school: utility/water — 12 percent expended.

All other lines items have spent 10 percent or less of their allocation. Out of the $12,344,382 the schools have to spend, $12,180,159 remains.

The positive start to fiscal 2006 comes on the heels of a somewhat positive close to fiscal 2005. In July, just after the end of fiscal 2005, the school department reported it would be able to give back roughly $136,000 to the town. However, the reimbursement was relatively small when compared to the roughly $760,500 added to the school budget over the course of the previous two years.

In April 2004, the town passed a $400,000 operating budget override solely to benefit the school department's fiscal 2005 budget. In addition, at the December 2004 Special Town Meeting, reserve fund transfers were approved which totaled $160,500 — $93,500 to cover school utility costs and $67,000 to cover school unemployment. At the 2005 Annual Town Meeting, an additional $100,000 was transferred into the reserve fund to cover school department expenses, such as utility costs, and an additional $100,000 was added directly to the school budget to cover any other fiscal 2005 costs which might present themselves.

The school department said it would return the $100,000 added to the reserve fund as well as roughly $36,000 of the unemployment costs.

The school committee was scheduled to meet last night (Thursday) after the Mariner went to press. The board was slated to discuss fiscal 2006 grant and revolving accounts. The committee will meet again Oct. 6.

Architect presents slides of Vineyard

The Hingham Public Library and Buttonwood Books & Toys will host Cohasset resident and Boston architect Keith Moskow, on Wed. Sept. 28, 7 p.m., at the Hingham Library. Moskow will deliver a slide presentation incorporating photographs from his book, "The Houses of Martha's Vineyard," which showcases 24 Vineyard homes built in the past 20 years by internationally renowned architects and emerging practitioners.

Stylistically diverse, the featured houses offer environmentally sensitive designs and innovative solutions that respond to, but do not mimic, the island's rich architectural past. The author has strong professional and personal ties to the island where he has completed multiple residential commissions.

Moskow is principal of Moskow Architects, a Boston firm that specializes in sustainable architecture. He received a bachelor of arts degree from Dartmouth College in New Hampshire and a master of architecture degree from the University of Pennsylvania. He has received design awards from the Boston Society of Architects, The Municipal Arts Society of New York, the Centre for Critical Architecture, San Francisco, and AIA Chicago.

The slide presentation will be followed by a question and answer segment. Books will be available for purchase. Refreshments will be served. Admission is free and open to the public. Call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 or visit www.buttonwoodbooks.com to order a signed copy if unable to attend.

CENTER
QUINCY MEDICAL
The Boston Medical Center Alliance For Quality

When you need health care, nothing is more important. Here are three reasons to choose Quincy Medical Center for that care.

Best Doctors®. In an annual review of top specialists nationwide, many Quincy Medical Center physicians were named among the Best Doctors in America®. From Endocrinology, Cardiovasular Disease, and Infectious Disease to Gastroenterology, Internal Medicine, Surgery, and more, you'll find America's Best Doctors practicing Tomorrow's Care Today right here.

Gold Seal™ Quality. Quincy Medical Center was found to be in the top 7% of hospitals nationwide for quality health care. Using detailed, aggressive benchmarks to measure care quality, the nation's top standard-setting and accrediting health care body -- the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations -- gave us their Gold Seal of approval.

Private Rooms. You wouldn't choose to share a hotel room with a stranger when you're at your best...why share a room when you're ill or injured? Unlike other South Shore or Greater Boston hospitals, all of our medical and surgical patients are cared for in private rooms.

Discover even more reasons to choose Quincy Medical Center. Call us toll-free now at 1-877-479-CARE (2273) or visit www.quincymc.org today.

A hospital should give you a great reason to choose them. We give you at least three.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Welcome to the world to Helena Marie Larsen, born on Sept. 1, 2005 weighing 8 pounds, five ounces and 20 inches long. Helena's parents are Donny and Katie Larsen of Cohasset and Miss Helena is adored and loved by many. Congratulations to all on your beautiful baby girl.

MISSING BIKE

Another story on some stolen property. A silver and black Diamondback Mountain Bike was taken from the dock near the Cohasset Harbor Resort at the end of August. If you or anyone you know ended up with a bike that just "appeared" please let me know through the column so that it can be returned to the owner with no questions asked.

SHOP AND HELP BENEFIT SCHOOLS

As we get ready to go into the pre-season shopping time of the year, here is a great way to make your online purchases help and benefit our public schools. Take a minute to register at www.Schoolpop.com (asecure website). Select the Cohasset school(s) you would like to benefit. Then just access your favorite merchants through the schoolpop.com website. Merchants pay rebates on all purchases directly to our schools. Schoolpop has hundreds of merchant links. Rebates are generally 1 percent-5 percent of your purchases. You don't need to be a parent to register. Community members who shop on-line can also register to earn rebates for our schools. So remember, before you shop, SCHOOLPOP!

REC SIGNUPS UNDERWAY

The fall registrations for programs and classes for children ages birth-teens have begun with the Cohasset Recreation Department. Sign-ups are ongoing and can be done at the Cohasset Town Hall, One Creative Place(130 King Street, Cohasset, MA 02025), fax at 781-383-2241 or by calling 781-383-2211 or 781-383-4109. Classes being offered are varied and include Music(ages 6 months on up), drama, gym programs, ceramics, arts and crafts and so much more.

Check out the website at www.onecreativeplace.net for more information. Classes begin the week of Oct. 3.

SHOW WILL SERVE AS FUNDRAISER

On Saturday, Oct. 15, the Cohasset Dramatic Club will present A Musical Review, THE BEST OF BROADWAY, featuring some of the best loved songs from musicals old and new, including Rent, Godspell, Smoky Joe's Cafe, The Scarlet Pimpernel, Nunsense, Guys and Dolls, The Sound of Music and more! The club has assembled a top-notch cast of singers and dancers to bring you this exciting evening of music. All proceeds from this event will go directly to Hurricane Katrina relief efforts. This event is one night only. We urge you to help make the relief contribution as large as possible, and join the club at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday, Oct. 15 at the Cohasset Town Hall. Tickets are available at the door, or by calling 617-697-2115. Ticket price is $15.

SAINT OURS TO SPEAK

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will begin its new season of meetings with another fascinating program by entomologist and naturalist Fred Saint Ours. On Tuesday, Sept. 27, club members will meet in Bates Hall at the Second Congregational Church. Following the 9:30 a.m. business meeting Mr. Saint Ours will identify and discuss the myriad South Shore insects that both plague and delight us. Learn about the good, the bad, and the noisy, and about programs utilizing beneficial insects to aid in controlling pests such as Purple Loostrife that now invades our wetlands. Coffee will be served at 9:00 a.m. Garden Club members will have the opportunity to place advance orders for this year's Fall Bulb Sale.

That is all of our news for this week. Please make sure to get me your news and info no later than Tuesdays by 5 p.m. EMAIL: aroundtowncohasset@yahoo.com; PHONE: 781-383-0143; FAX: 781-383-2241

Third annual Harvest Picnic held at Holly Hill Farm

More than 150 members of the Friends of Holly Hill Farm attended the third annual Harvest Picnic in their honor at Holly Hill Farm Sunday, Sept. 18.

Highlights of the day were the sumptuous offerings prepared by local restaurants and friends of the farm, a stirring speech by Ted Hirsch, administrator and teacher at the South Shore Charter Public School, a raffle, hayrides and a trip to the farm's growing fields to harvest tomatoes.

Local restaurants and caterers providing meals using the farm's organically-grown produce included Bernard's, Bia's Bistro, Savory Kitchen and Zia's Cookies of Cohasset, Bridgemans of Hull and Circe's Grotto of Scituate. Other donors included Trish Berube (butternut squash soup), Terry Fitzgerald (organic wine), Eileen Norton (cider), Louise Painter (desserts and cider) and Tina Watson (cabbage salad).

Speaking a short distance from the school's garden at the farm, where his K – second-graders from the South Shore Charter Public School have been coming on a weekly basis for four years, speaker Ted Hirsch described the importance of having a garden and farm as part of his students' educational experience and thanked the gathered members for their support.

Local restaurants provided gift certificates for the raffle, the proceeds of which will be going to support the farm's future educational programs. They included Cohasset's Atlantica and The Red Lion Inn and the Winery of Scituate. In addition, Jewelry By Sage provided a raffle winner with a $100 gift certificate.

The day ended with trips to the tomato field for a mini-take-home harvest with a number of children enjoying the hayride to the field in a trailer provided by Brendon St. John.

For more information about the Friends of Holly Hill Farm and its programs call Education Director Jonathan Belber at 781-383-1455.

Author draws rave reviews

Fourth-grade student Sam Curatola, shows how big a smile he would like illustrator Eric Rohmann to draw on a pig's face.

Eric Rohmann, who has won numerous Caldecott Medals for his books, demonstrates the way in which he can turn an ordinary cat into a super villain. The author and illustrator visited the students at the Deer Hill School on Friday, Sept. 16 with help from Buttonwood Books and Toys of Cohasset.

Above: Eric Rohmann talks about the creative process behind the development of his book "Clara and Asha" with the third and fourth grade students at Deer Hill Friday, Sept. 16. Clara is the little girl and Asha is the fish.

Left: Eric Rohmann takes some time to autograph a copy of his book "Clara and Asha," for third-grade teacher Jeanne Hanson before taking to the stage to give a presentation.

Jeweler crafts gala as fundraiser for hurricane relief

By Matt Whorf

Vicki and Valerie King stand by one of the display cases in the new King Jewelers store in Scituate. The store will hold a gala opening Saturday.

The owners of King Jewelers of Cohasset say the excitement about opening their newest location in Scituate has been tempered in recent weeks by the devastation caused by Hurricane Katrina.

With that in mind, the owners have decided a portion of the sales from Saturday's gala grand opening of their new location at 812 Chief Justice Cushing Highway in Scituate will be donated to the Salvation Army hurricane relief efforts.

"This a great occasion for us and a wonderful time in our history. But in light of the recent tragic national events, we've also been spending these weeks leading up to the date thinking of ways of how we can give back," said Valerie King, co-owner of King Jewelers.

The gala will include a preview of King's featured fall jewelry collections, light refreshments and an opportunity for co-owners Valerie and sister Vicki King to welcome people to the new store. The independent jeweler intends continued support of the Salvation Army relief project as it responds to disasters affecting fellow U.S. citizens, especially children.

"We've always felt very fortunate that we live and do business in this sort of affluent area and have had such a loyal customer base," said Valerie King. "And for this reason, we see our Gala event as not just a big party to celebrate our open house. We want some other good to come out of it, and we want to spread our good fortune to some of our fellow citizens who are going to need help from all of us for a long time."

King Jewelers has been on the South Shore for some six decades. Valerie and Victoria King are third generation co-owners of the family business which was founded by their grandfather, Forrest King, in Lexington in 1921. King's son, Forrest King, Jr., took over ownership in the following decades through moves first to Scituate, then to Cohasset.

The long-standing independent retailer is recognized for its selection of fine jewelry, from classic, new and exclusive collections, couture jewelry and fine giftware. King's also has created their own line of jewelry and giftware known as "The Royal Collection," which includes diamond rings, pearl and diamond jewelry and custom-designed Chelsea "By the Sea" clocks, depicting familiar local scenes such as Minot's Light, Scituate Lighthouse, the Mayflower and Boston Light.

"Our philosophy at King Jewelers has always been to provide customers with a welcoming, but elegant, atmosphere, with deep concern for the quality and integrity of our pieces at prices that are fair and competitive," said Vicki King.

Vicki King is also a Graduate Gemologist, holding a certificate from the Gemological Institute of America (GIA). She and her sister both live in Scituate.

The new King Jewelers building, approximately a mile down Route 3A from the old Cohasset Plaza location, represents the completion of a project begun approximately one year ago. The Kings purchased the building then obtained a town permit to house other new businesses in the facility. King's tenants include Accord Stationery, which offers an array of fine papers and accessories, and Dillon and Company, who specialize in fine English furniture and antiques with a showroom filled with impressive pieces and collections. All will share the building with the already affixed business Peridot, the nail and facial spa.

King's is also the first jeweler — local or national — to show the collection of Cohasset jewelry designer Elizabeth Kissick. Currently, the store displays two of Kissick's custom bracelets commemorating Boston's championship teams, both the multiple Super Bowl-winning New England Patriots and a special "Reverse the Curse" design for the Boston Red Sox. King's and Kissick's next collaboration is a planned commission for the designer to create a similar bracelet in a fundraising effort for victims of Hurricane Katrina as well as other disaster relief, tentatively to be called the American Relief Bracelet. The grand opening gala festivities will also include contest drawings for a gold watch and other pieces.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall earlier this week:

Conservation Commission, Oct. 6, 7 p.m.

Advisory Committee, Oct. 6, 7:30 p.m.

Board of Assessors, Sept. 27, 4 p.m.

Board of Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees, Oct. 12, 6 p.m. at the library, 35 Ripley Road.

Planning Board, Oct. 5, 7 p.m. (7:30, public hearing 82 Border St. large home, 8:15 p.m., SMROD bylaw rules and regulations)

Sewer Commission, Oct. 3, 6 p.m.

Recreation Commission, Oct. 5, 6 p.m.

Zoning Board of Appeals, Oct. 3, 7:30 p.m.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless indicated otherwise. More meetings may have been posted later in the week, call the Town Clerk at 781-383-4100 for updates.

Economic development committee is appointed

Planning board chairman Al Moore will serve as the ex-officio member of the economic development committee. The board of selectmen has appointed four residents to serve on the committee, including Chuck Hurd, 18 Jerusalem Road Drive, Thom Powers, 25 Powers Lane, Gabriel Gomez, 59 Highland Ave., and Peter Brown, 38 Atlantic Ave.

The committee will meet for 12 weeks, and at the conclusion will present its findings to the board of selectmen. The board will accept other residents who are interested in participating. Residents who are interested in planning commercial growth for the town should contact the selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105, or send a letter of intent and a resume to Town Hall at 41 Highland Ave.

Historical society to hold volunteer appreciation day

The Cohasset Historical Society is having a "growth spurt" and would like members of the community to become a part of it. Whether you are currently a volunteer or would like to be, volunteer appreciation day will be a good time to meet other members and hear about some of their experiences with the society. The event will be held Wednesday, Sept. 28, from 2-4 p.m. in the Pratt Building, located on South Main Street. For more information or to make a reservation, call (781) 383-1434.

Litchfield takes over tax possession role

Acting treasurer/collector Linda Litchfield has been appointed to serve as tax possession custodian for the sale of two small parcels of land acquired by the town through foreclosure proceedings. The properties are located on Windsor Road and Mill Lane and will be sold at public auction at a date to be determined. The foreclosure decree was entered for the Windsor Road property July 15, 1998, and Aug. 3, 1998 for the Mill Lane property.

Reorganization of historical commission

At its Sept. 12 meeting the Cohasset Historical Commission reorganized for the 2005-2006 year. Rebecca Bates-McArthur will serve as chairman and David H. Wadsworth will serve as secretary. Meetings are held the second Monday of each month at 7:30 p.m. at Town Hall.

Woodside lot sold back to the town

A lot of land in the Woodside Cemetery on North Main Street has been sold back to the town. The parcel was owned by Mary Mulvey Willwerth, and the lot is No. 158 South, Section E. For more information, contact Mary Snow at the Department of Public Works at (781) 383-0273.

Nedrow steps down from housing board

Joe Nedrow of Fairoaks Lane has resigned from his position on the senior housing committee. "I have committed to some other voluntary activities that are requiring more time than I anticipated," he wrote in a letter to the board of selectmen, dated Sept. 12.

Nedrow said with the reinstatement of the Cohasset Housing Partnership, he would recommend the selectmen dissolve the current senior housing committee. "Although the current committee has been responsible for many efforts to keep our seniors in town (accessory dwellings, senior overlay district, dedication of town land for senior housing, promoting the Cook Estate, etc.) the Cohasset Housing Partnership offers the most potential for the next step in actually creating housing opportunities," he said.

"There are several individuals on the current committee who would be ideal candidates for the C.H.P. Additionally, I would recommend one of the nine representatives be someone from the Council on Elder Affairs," he said.

The board of selectmen said it would take Nedrow's recommendation to dissolve the committee under advisement and thanked him for his many years of dedicated service.

'Healthy lifestyle' volunteers sought

Cohasset Elder Affairs needs volunteers to take a course on Healthy Lifestyles, presented in Hingham, to help get this knowledge out to Cohasset seniors.

The course is 12 weeks long and covers topics including stages of behavior change; daily exercise training for all seniors and injury prevention; food safety and safe kitchens; good fats vs. bad fats and how to read food labels; hidden sugars, sodium in foods; herbs and spices, start your own vegetable garden; fruits and vegetables, grains, water consumption; vitamins, minerals and supplements; stress and depression; issues that arise from a visit to the doctor's office; medication safety and home safety. All materials for the program were developed by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health. To volunteer, contact the CEA at (781) 383-9112.

Say what you mean

Way back when, in another town we got into a lot of trouble with a school committee candidate when we paraphrased her remarks in the paper to say "the students flunked the test."

She stood up at the next meeting during the public comment period and chastised us for incorrectly reporting what she had said. She explained what she actually said was "the students did not meet the minimum expectations to pass." She also put notices up in all the schools apologizing to the teachers about our reporting.

[By way of explanation, reporters do paraphrase remarks which means what is printed is not a direct quote but a synopsis, if you will, of what was said.]

So what's the point of all this? We'll admit to being intrigued and a little excited about the Cohasset School Committee's plans to change meeting formats.

In August the board had a lesson – or maybe we should say got some advice – on how to conduct meetings from a representative of the Massachusetts Association of School Committees to better enhance communication and productivity during meetings.

So the school committee plans to test a new meeting format over the next three months. Plans are to include only business items during the first meeting of the month and the second meeting would be more informal, filled with discussion and sharing of ideas. The school committee typically meets on the first and third Thursdays of the month.

We hope this pilot program will go a long way toward enhancing communication. School officials and educators tend to fall into what, in the news business, is called "educationese." [For attorneys, it's legalese].

What that means is educators and those elected to oversee the schools have a language all their own. Here are some examples of educationese that we've pulled from our archives: proactive strategic planning, education frameworks, education reform, integrated preschool, holistic thinking, transparent budget process and action, to name a few.

As reporters we do our best to translate into layman's terms but if the school committee would speak more clearly – it would better serve the public.

For example does transparent budget process mean the books are open for all to see? Does it mean that no question is off limits? Does it mean that everything will be explained clearly and openly even when numbers aren't final or all the bills aren't in?

As an aside, we also think when teachers are picketing outside the schools – that each member of the school committee should be able to speak to that. While there has to be some caution exercised during collective bargaining, school committee members are elected to represent a constituency which needs to know how they feel about important issues.

Prepared press releases that speak with "one voice" should go into the circular file [wastebasket] before they see the light of day.

PSO fundraiser benefits programs

The Osgood and Deer Hill PSO have launched their Innisbrook Gift Wrap Fundraiser this week. There are two wonderful catalogs this year filled with the quality, stylish gift wrap Innisbrook is known for, but also available are many neat gift ideas and candy and chocolate. New this year is an opportunity to purchase from a wide selection of magazine subscriptions. As always, 50 percent of all sales go directly to the PSO and orders can be placed with students, at the schools or online.

This is an important fundraiser because the PSO uses the proceeds to fund worthwhile programs at all the schools. At the Osgood and Deer Hill schools, the proceeds help fund Character Education Programs, Classroom and Library grants, Curriculum Enrichment Programs and Teacher Appreciation events.

The Character Education Programs enhance our children's learning by providing opportunities to teach difficult social skills such as problem solving, conflict resolution and dealing with bullying and peer pressure. The Curriculum Enrichment programs provide hands-on educational programs specific to each grade to supplement and complement existing curriculum. An example of the Teacher Appreciation events is the Welcome Back Breakfast being held for teachers and staff at each school this week.

Please support our children and schools by participating in this fundraiser. Catalogs can be viewed at the Osgood and Deer Hill schools, the Town Hall, the Library Community room and the South Shore Community Center Nursery School. The fundraiser will end on Oct. 3. If you have any questions or would like to place an order, please call Mary Jo Blackington at 781-383-0626.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Mariner 'picket' cartoon cannot go unchecked

TO THE EDITOR:

I was pleased to see that the Cohasset Teachers Association informational picket campaign caught the attention of cartoonist Jim Hamilton. Mr. Hamilton's interpretation of its impact on students, however, is sadly and profoundly mistaken. Mr. Hamilton's portrayal of the traditional welcome back experience for students is so distorted that it constitutes an egregious error on his part and an insulting and damaging representation of teachers that cannot go unchecked.

Mr. Hamilton portrays the conventional teacher who traditionally welcomes students back with bubbly enthusiasm for yet one more exciting year of educational adventure as the misinformed, as the misguided one, surrounded by disgruntled colleagues intruding upon this sacred (you all know the script) ritual with their selfish contractual demands. (Note, misguided teacher even came to the picket with the traditional happy face appropriately placed on his sign, while "picketers" bear the as-expected grimace of ungrateful, disgruntled, greedy public servants. Hummpph!)

All readers in our community should know that in this enthusiastic teacher's first few weeks of school, I have witnessed nothing but the traditional joys of a new year. I guarantee readers that all is well at CHS with respect to conventional student-teacher interactions. In fact, if Mr. Hamilton would seek permission to attend classes (and he's most welcome in mine) he would find that the Cohasset Teachers Association's contractual concerns do not intrude in any way into the curriculum, instruction, and assessment expectations that the teachers hold for themselves. Minus the red buttons worn by CTA members, there is absolutely no intersection between teacher enthusiasm for the educational enterprise and contractual issues.

All that being said, there are contractual issues, of course, that may impact the scope of services delivered to students, but that's an issue for a different day. The topic at hand here is Mr. Hamilton's portrayal of teacher enthusiasm for welcoming and working with students.

To Mariner readers who found themselves sympathetic to Mr. Hamilton's portrayal of the recent informational picketing action on the part of CTA members, I hope I have assured you that there are numerous smiley faces meeting and greeting the students each and every day, each and every class. But don't take my word for it, nor assume that Mr. Hamilton got it right. Ask the students. Come to visit classes. I'm sure I speak for many of my colleagues in saying that our doors are open. Come see for yourself. Our teaching is enthusiastic, our concern for student achievement is manifest in all that we do, and our commitment to striving for excellence is steadfast.

LIBRARY CORNER

The following activities are planned at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library:

Knitting group — Come join the new knitting group, Monday evenings from 6:30 to 8:30 in the library's Historical Room. This is a fun group for all who love to knit or just have an interest in knitting. Bring your knitting project and join like-minded friends at the library. For more information call Mary Coughlin at 781-383-1348.

Artist exhibit — Maureen Brookfield, a Marshfield artist, will display her works at the library from Sept. 1 through Oct. 30. Brookfield, an award-winning artist, will exhibit her watercolors.

Book discussion group — Join the group Thursday, Sept. 29, at 10 a.m. for coffee and discussion of "Wild Swans" by Jung Chang. Registration in advance is required. Call Gayle Walsh at 781-383-1348.

Independent film series — The Paul Pratt Memorial Library will be showing the independent film, "Le Grande Voyage," Thursday Sept. 29, at 7 p.m. Free admission and refreshments. The library is located at 35 Ripley Road. For more information call 781-383-1348 or visit www.cohassetlibrary.org.

Sunday hours — In addition to its regular hours, the library is now open Sundays 2-5 p.m.

New titles — For parents of college-bound students, the library has two new reference sources: The 2006 editions of The College Board College Handbook and The College Board College Cost & Financial Aid Handbook. The College Handbook profiles more than 3,600 colleges, universities and technical schools while the Financial Aid Handbook focuses on ways to understand and navigate financial aid options.

Homebound delivery service — If you love to read but are unable to come to the library due to an illness or disability, the library offers a home delivery service. For those interested, a volunteer from the Friends of the Cohasset Library will visit you at your residence to discuss your reading preferences and take your requests for library materials. Selections will be delivered to you and picked up and returned to the library on a regular schedule. If you, or anyone you know, might be interested in this program, call the library at 781-383-1348.

Computer help — Do you need help using the library's computers? Would you like to learn how to search the online catalog or reference databases? Sign up for a one-on-one tutorial with the reference librarian, Gayle Walsh. Call the library to schedule a session.

HEALTH NOTES

Grant request will help address storm water

By Steve N. Bobo

This summer marked the worst episodes of pollution of our harbor and its estuaries in memory. Our beaches and waterways were closed to swimming for most of the summer. Even Sandy Beach was closed for the first time anyone remembers.

One measure of quality of a town's services is the way it handles growth. Cohasset is slowly recognizing that, if we are to retain our customary beauty, our unspoiled waters, and our bucolic lifestyle, we will have to work to accommodate the fact of ever more roofs, sidewalks, driveways, roads and parking lots and the polluted storm runoff they produce. Growth for a town as close to Boston as we are is inevitable.

Fortunately, with a growing recognition of the threat, there is an increasing number of concerned citizens willing to take part in activities to meet it. Last week, the town submitted grant requests totaling nearly $100,000 to upgrade some of the infrastructure which controls storm-water runoff into our waters. But more important than the money was the consensus that is being reached by different groups with different objectives but who all are committed to improving the health of our town's natural resources. Any listing of these groups would include several new organizations like the Health of the Harbor Committee and the Water Resource Protection Committee, both of whom wrote letters of support for the grants requests. Of course, the Conservation Commission also supports the grants, but, recognizing that the Greenbush Line will have a heavy impact on environmental health, the Greenbush coordinators have also been included among those who are providing input for the grant solicitation.

Briefly the grant is comprised of three parts: Resubmission of a previous year's request for support of a Watershed Academy under the aegis of Center for Student Coastal Research(CSCR). Using highly technical skills developed over years of field work by student volunteers, this organization will provide the backbone of any assessment activities needed to support anecdotal evidence of pollution reported to town officials. The data will be confirmed by strict oversight and validity sampling by a Board of Health representative and state certified labs.

The second part of the grant will cover an evaluation of the waters entering Jacobs Meadow. These consist of several sub watersheds covering parts of south Cohasset including much of the Pond Street hills, Ellms Meadow and James Brook. Water samples will be taken over much of the center of town and recommendations made to provide means for managing storm-water overflows as occurred several times last summer.

The grant will be used to help fund the proposed analysis efforts. The first phase of work will involve a compilation of available information, including plans studies, and independent surveys to more specifically define the extent of the drainage system attributed to James Brook. A previous storm-water mapping program has identified most drainage structures within the town; however, detailed information regarding the structures and their overall connectivity still needs further definition. Such fieldwork will involve manhole and catch basin inspections, potentially flow and dye testing, superficial investigations and structure and pipe measurement. The Cohasset D.P.W. will conduct cleaning of catch basin structures and assist with facility inspection. An engineering firm will provide technical oversight for the field evaluation efforts and will generate an updated drainage plan for the sub-basin. Once the drainage system has been verified relative to extent and location, a sampling program will be devised to appropriately assess pollution influences. It is currently anticipated that three sampling events will be conducted: one during dry weather and two during wet weather. Testing is anticipated to be conducted for dissolved oxygen, salinity, oil/grease, total nitrogen, fecal coliform, enterococcus, conductivity, temperature and acidity. The CSCR will utilize the volunteer efforts of area high school students to conduct system inspection, sample collection and to conduct some of the laboratory analysis. Work will be supervised by the Board of Health with technical input of a qualified engineering contractor. A QA/QC program will be utilized incorporating blanks, split samples for outside lab verification and standards.

The third part of the grant will be directed toward the so-called Parker Avenue Cut. Some work has already been done to remove trash along the cut, but it needs a full scale survey and thoroughgoing assessment of nearby pollution sources followed by development of a more complete plan for remediation.

Hopefully, the work now being proposed to the DEP through the department of Coastal Zone Management will allow the town to begin its town-wide storm-water plan. The plan will require participation of many private citizens and considerable resources, but the town has always solved such problems before when there's a need.

LIBRARY CORNER

Backpacks — All students who registered for the summer reading program should come in and pick up their backpacks by the end of September. Plenty of backpacks are waiting for their owners.

Library cards — September is National Library Card month. Library users need to have their library card present each time they wish to use the library computers or check out materials. If you have lost your old card, the library will replace it one time for free. All additional replacement cards will cost $5. Take the time now to look for your card or replace your card, as school projects will soon begin. Library users will not be serviced without a card.

MamaSteph is back! — MamaSteph will be performing music and movement for young children in the Meeting Room Monday, Oct. 3, 17, 24, and 31 from 10:30-11 a.m. Children must be accompanied by a caregiver. This program is open to all communities. No registration required. This program is funded by an LSTA grant awarded by the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Register now! —for Story & Craft, a literature-based story hour including a thematic craft. It is open to all Cohasset residents ages 3-6. It is a four-week commitment and will take place Thursday, Oct. 6, 13, 20, and 27. You may choose 10-11 a.m. or 1-2 p.m. Telephone registrations accepted, 781-383-1348. For further information call Mrs. Moody in the Children's Room or e-mail at smoody@ocln.org.

Garden Club hosts bulb sale

Orders can be placed immediately by calling 781-383-0998.

Fall is the time to plan for spring flowers and September is the month to make garden space for brown bulbs that will burst into glorious color in April and May. The Community Garden Club of Cohasset has a special collection of tulip, daffodil and early blooming bulbs on sale now. These are outstanding top-size bulbs and should be ordered now for planting in October when the weather has cooled. Orders can be placed immediately by calling 781-383-0998. In addition, Garden Club members will be selling bulbs at the October Farmers' Markets. Photographs of the flowers and ordering information are available at www.communitygardenclubofcohasset.org.

Tulips are $1 each; daffodils $1.50 each, and the small muscari and scilla will be sold in bags of 20 at prices ranging from $5 to $10 per bag, depending on the variety. Proceeds from the annual fall bulb sale benefit the Cohasset community projects maintained by the Community Garden Club.

This year's bulb selection includes 11 varieties of tulips from small species bulbs perfect for naturalizing to large double peony-flowered tulips and the hard to find viridiflora, 'Spring Green.' The four daffodil choices are fragrant and uncommon varieties that will return year after year in well-drained soil. Plantings of the small deep or pale blue muscari and bright cobalt scilla 'Spring Beauty' can spread a lush blue carpet beneath taller bulbs and emerging perennials.

Newcomers to hold New Member Coffee

The Newcomers Club is hosting a new member coffee in September for current, new, and prospective members to meet new people and learn more about the club. Friends and children are also invited.

Sept. 27, 7 p.m. at Starbucks, Route 3A in Cohasset.

RSVP to Rebecca at 781-545-8024 or email rebecca_graziano@yahoo.com.

To learn more about Newcomers call Gerri Goodman at 781-383-6221, or Rebecca Graziano at 781-545-8024.

New endings for old flicks

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Have you ever watched the film "Casablanca" and secretly wished that it was Ilsa who stayed behind with Rick while Captain Reneault got on the Lisbon plane with that insufferably heroic Victor Laszlo?

Stick around. You may have a chance.

Universal Studios, I am told, plans to release next month a movie called "The Interpreter," starring Sean Penn and Nicole Kidman, which was shot with two endings, one for the theaters, the other for DVDs.

If you don't like one, try the other.

"An alternative ending is a great way to provide added value because it brings film fans into the creative process," said Ken Graffeo, executive vice president of Universal Studios Home Entertainment.

With twice as much money in their pockets, he neglected to point out.

Even more intriguing, given Hollywood's penchant for remaking (and ruining) old classic flicks, is the prospect of shooting them all over again with two, three, maybe four different endings to satisfy various pressure groups.

Like rewriting Little Red Riding Hood to win a G-rating from PETA.

It's already started, according to USA Today, with a nine-minute alternate ending to the film "Titanic" also due out next month. I don't know what they're doing but I can assure you the ship still sinks. They wouldn't dare.

An outfit called New Line Home Entertainment is currently doing alternate endings for selected movies going back to 1997. How long will it be before the Ku Klux Klan is wiped out in a new ending of "Birth of a Nation" to satisfy the NAACP?

The possibilities are endless.

Suppose, in a new ending of "Casablanca," starring Tom Cruise and Britney Spears, suppose Major Strasser outdrew Rick and shot him dead and took Victor to a concentration camp. How would that sell to German audiences?

Or suppose the Moroccans (that's where Casablanca is, you know) suppose they arose and kicked out the Germans and the French and set up the Moroccan Islamic Republic. How would that sell in Osama's outdoor drive-in in Afghanistan?

Instead of getting off the most memorable line from "Gone With the Wind" — "Frankly, me dear, I just don't give a damn" — suppose Rhett Butler had taken Scarlett into his arms and they rode off to live happily ever after at Tara.

Suppose, instead of accepting homage from his capos, Michael Corleone had told them to find someone else to be Godfather because he was going off to New Hampshire with Kay to run a ski lodge, leaving Fredo to be boss of the family.

Suppose Butch and Sundance hadn't died in that gunfight in the Bolivian mining town but lived to return to the States and made a fortune portraying themselves in motion pictures under the names of Paul Newman and Robert Redford.

And suppose they remade the ending to "The Witches of Eastwick" and, instead of vanishing in a puff of smoke, Darryl Van Horne runs away with Chris Gabriel, his boy friend — just as the author, John Updike, had written it.

Gay marriage opponents have tough road ahead

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

MICHAEL NORTON AND AMY LAMBIASO

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Gay marriage opponents portrayed last week's vote to kill a constitutional amendment banning gay marriages and sanctioning same-sex civil unions as a victory.

They said it cleared a path for voters in 2008 to settle the definition of marriage, and predicted that when it occurred, voters would agree with them that it should be between a man and a woman only, just like all other states.

They said the reason why so few gay marriage opponents bothered to show up for the historic vote was because they were out on the streets gathering signatures for a question that would end gay marriage, which has now been legal in Massachusetts for 16 months.

And they said they already have the votes locked up in the Legislature to advance their proposal from lawmakers who believe that marriage between a man and a woman is the best and only model for society.

Their claims may not hold up to the reality of Bay State politics.

Gay marriage supporters in the Legislature are hoping the vote was the last one on the issue.

And a gay marriage ban won't appear on the 2008 ballot unless the Legislature, which just went on record against a more moderate proposal, votes to put it on the ballot.

How likely is that? Not very.

Massachusetts is among the bluest states. And while most voters are not aligned with the Democratic Party, the Legislature itself is downright navy. When House Speaker Salvatore DiMasi said lawmakers must make sure gay marriage "never, ever appears as a question on the ballot," gay marriage opponents had good cause for concern. The Democrat-controlled Legislature doesn't lose many battles over which it has control.

This is the defensive strategy of gay marriage supporters to preserve the unique status quo here.

They are hoping that the same Supreme Judicial Court that made gay marriage the law of the Massachusetts landscape will overturn Attorney General Thomas Reilly's decision earlier this month to certify the gay marriage ban proposal as ballot eligible.

Massachusetts is among the bluest states. And while most voters are not aligned with the Democratic Party, the Legislature itself is downright navy.

Gay rights activists will simultaneously attempt to derail the ballot push with a meticulous campaign of their own to review and question the validity of initiative petition signatures. The ballot campaign needs to gather more than 65,000 certified voter signatures. It's difficult but doable. But technical problems have killed previous campaigns.

If gay marriage opponents make it past those challenges, they then would face the hurdle of securing 50 votes in two successive sittings of the 200-member Legislature.

A few thoughts about that. While the defeat of the question was predicted high and low, no one predicted it would receive only 39 favorable votes. So that raises some questions about support for a gay marriage ban in the Legislature. The question can't advance without 50 votes from the same group.

And the hopes of gay marriage opponents are pinned on two very precarious assumptions.

One is that there will be another vote at all.

While Senate President Robert Travaglini, who presides at the convention, has been magnanimous about facilitating debate and votes on the issue, that could change. It was only three years ago that gay marriage supporters celebrated the sudden death of a similar question that was the result of the convention adjourning without ever voting on it. Any methods necessary to kill it, they said at the time, were justifiable. On Sept. 21, chief gay marriage critic Rep. Philip Travis, D-Rehoboth, hoped such tactics would not surface again. But pro-gay marriage lawmakers overwhelmingly reelected last fall may not be worried much about voter backlashes.

The second assumption is that a question banning gay marriage will make it to the ballot without being amended by the Legislature. Votes of the past two years show there would be great difficulty amassing the two-thirds majority to alter a voter-initiated constitutional amendment – the question defeated last week won majority backing last year after weeks of talks. But as this week's vote shows, changing circumstances can lead to drastic vote swings.\

If you're confused, don't feel bad. The framers of the state constitution intended for it to be time-consuming and complex to change the document. And gay marriage opponents are learning how difficult it can be.

• Senate eyes quick action on drunken driving bills — One day after an emotional, four-hour hearing on legislation named after a Marshfield teenager killed by a drunken driver, Senate President Travaglini said he is pushing for quick action on the plan, dubbed Melanie's Bill. House leaders expressed hesitation with moving too quickly on legislation that seeks toughens penalties facing repeat offenders, fearing it might not withstand judicial scrutiny. Family members who have had loved ones killed in alcohol-related accidents say tougher penalties will deter habitual drunken drivers from getting behind the wheel.

• House and Romney on same track for job creation — House leaders were struck by the similarities between proposals submitted by Gov. Romney and Democratic leaders to stimulate the state's economy after it tanked in 2001. The common ground was highlighted during a five-hour Economic Development and Emerging Technologies Committee hearing, during which Romney's chief economic expert Ranch Kimball applauded many aspects of the $300 million House plan. House leaders prediction floor debate and action on the bill soon. Lawmakers and the administration agree that the state should invest in an in-state sales force and focus more resources on the 32 career centers statewide. Another major area of agreement is the need for a pool of money to help communities develop growth-related infrastructure.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE, BHRC records local representatives and senators' votes on four roll calls from the week of September 12-16.

BAN SAME-SEX MARRIAGE/ESTABLISH CIVIL UNIONS (S 5)

Constitutional Convention 39-157, defeated the proposed constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage but giving same-sex couples the right to form civil unions. Supporters said that the amendment is a fair and reasonable compromise that protects the traditional institution of marriage while ensuring that gay and lesbians have the constitutional right to form civil unions and be afforded some of the protections of married couples. Some amendment opponents said that they support same-sex marriage and oppose this amendment and any other attempt to abolish same-sex marriage and insert discrimination into the constitution. Other amendment opponents said that they oppose same-sex marriage and support an initiative petition that would place a "pure" question on the 2008 ballot banning same-sex marriage and making no reference to civil unions. Some of those opponents said that they also oppose civil unions while others said that they prefer that the civil unions be taken up as regular legislation and not as part of a proposed constitutional amendment. (A "Yes" vote is for the amendment banning same-sex marriage but giving same-sex couples the right to form civil unions. A "No" vote is against the amendment.)

EMERGENCY CONTRACEPTION (S 2073)

House 139-16, Senate 37-0, override Gov. Romney's veto of a bill requiring that all hospitals offer female rape victims emergency contraception, commonly known as the "morning-after pill," without a doctor's prescription. The measure also allows licensed pharmacists who have completed a training course to dispense the pill without a prescription to any woman. Override supporters said that the bill would provide easier access to the pill for women who are raped or have unprotected sex. They argued that this would reduce many unintended pregnancies and abortions. Some override opponents said that the bill would unfairly attempt to force Catholic hospitals and their medical personnel to perform these "chemical abortions" that are against their religious views. Others said that the bill does not impose any age restrictions and would allow girls as young as 12 to receive the pill at the local pharmacy without the consent or knowledge of her parents. Romney said in his veto message that he vetoed the bill to honor his campaign pledge not to change the state's abortion laws by restricting or facilitating abortion. He argued that while the pill can act as a contraceptive, it can also terminate a living embryo after conception. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill. A "No" vote is against the bill.)

RETIREMENT PAY FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION TEACHERS (S 2057)

House 155-0, Senate 38-0, override Gov. Romney's veto of a bill allowing vocational educational teachers in public schools to count three years of training in their fields as creditable service that can be used toward their retirement benefits. The teachers would have to pay into the retirement system the same amount of money, plus interest, that they would have paid if they had been teaching for those three years. Override supporters said that vocational education teachers, including plumbers and electricians, are required to train in their profession for several years prior to being certified to teach. They argued that many do not become teachers until their mid 30s and are unfairly shortchanged by not being allowed to pay into the retirement system during their training years. Romney said in his veto message that these teachers are an integral part of the education system but noted that the state must balance this recognition with fiscal responsibility, and the fact that the state's unfunded pension liability is estimated to be $12 billion. (A "Yes" vote is for the bill allowing the teachers to buy back the creditable services.)

CAR RENTAL SURCHARGE (H 4180)

House 134-21, Senate 35-2, override Gov. Romney's veto of a bill allowing the city of Revere to impose up to a $10 surcharge on the rental of motor vehicles in that city. Override supporters said that the city's police station is in deplorable shape. They noted that the funds would be used to build a new joint police and fire station and that the surcharge would end when construction is completed. They argued that the surcharge would affect mostly out-of-town visitors who rent cars at Boston's Logan airport from companies that are located in Revere. Override opponents said that the surcharge is a clever name for a new tax that would affect not only tourists but many Massachusetts citizens who rent cars from these companies. They argued that approval of this local tax would open the door for many cities and towns to ask the Legislature for approval to impose some kind of new tax in their communities. (A "Yes" vote is for allowing the surtax. A "No" vote is against allowing the surtax.)

Bringing our world closer

e:os pretending to be a hippo to deter poachers from killing it for its horn — and their various environmental "ailments" are carried through into the exhibit kiosks.

Each kiosk includes hands-on interactive activities ranging from computer games to television cartoon characters and "prescriptions for the future," which describe the positive ways people around the world are making a difference and includes places to go for more information.

"Each kiosk has some kind of interactive component," said Bolduc, which makes the information very accessible for children.

Bolduc said one of the more visually impressive pieces of the exhibit is the section dealing with coral reefs. The large pieces of coral, featuring fish and a sea turtle, are equipped with a television screen showing a short program on global warming as well as a globe and computer game.

"You can tell a lot about the climate based on the health of coral reefs," said Bolduc, noting coral reefs are a fairly delicate ecosystem. At 1,200 pounds, the coral reef portion of the exhibit was one of the largest to be brought into the museum.

However, the children enter and exit through a large canopy of trees which is quite impressive as well. There they will learn about the dangers of clearing forests and the fantastic wildlife that live high atop their branches.

Another kiosk explains issues dealing with wildlife trade. Suitcases filled with items such as crocodile purses, carved ivory, and a hawksbill turtle shell — all under protective plexiglass — teach children about the devastating effect poaching is having on certain animal species.

The earth's soil is also at risk and a kiosk dedicated to the dirt lets children take a peek inside the earth to centipedes crawling through. Children will be able to smell what healthy soil smells like, and learn about erosion. There is also a computer game which lets children test their soil IQ.

It may look like the seafood case at the local market, but the Fisheries of our World learning kiosk helps teach children about the preferred fish to catch to ensure their populations remain stable. There is an interactive screen featuring a chef who asks children to create a "sustainable fish stew" and with every choice of fish for their stew, they are told whether they have made a good choice, and why. Children are also taught about the dangers of trawling, or dragging nets along the bottom of the ocean to catch fish.

"I think it's going to be very good for families to see. It's an impacting exhibit which is geared for all ages."

Michele Bolduc, director of the Our World Museum

There is also a kiosk where younger visitors can sing and dance along with a music video by children's entertainer Billy B., or play with a veritable menagerie of animal puppets. There is also a resource area which teaches children about toxics and the many ways they enter the environment. There is a pinball game included in the exhibit which provides an illustration, showing children all the pathways for toxins.

To bring the total biodiversity exhibit to life, Bolduc said the help she has received from volunteers has been priceless. "Eighty-five percent was done by volunteers," said Bolduc, adding the remaining 15 percent was completed by a paid audio video electrician who hooked up the sound and computers for the exhibits. She said she is extremely grateful for all the help given by elementary students Charlotte Barszewski, Sara Corry, and Olivia Barnum, high school students Katie and Chris Kuppens, Jenna Larson who is about to begin her first year at Boston College, and adults Tom Newhall whose wife sits on the Our World board, Jon Stavis, Alex Swartwood whose wife Cindy also sits on the board, and Ricki Carfagno.

In addition to the new exhibit, located on the second level of the museum, the programs currently running on the first floor will continue.

Each month, Our World focuses on a different culture from around the world, and various crafts and activities are centered around that culture. During the month of October, the country of India will be featured, followed by Harvest Celebrations in November and Holidays around the World in December.

"We have a very strong group of people who have been here every week," participating in activities, said Bolduc.

In addition, there is a new member of the Our World family who is located on the first floor of the museum. A bull python who used to live at the Inly School in Scituate has come to live in Cohasset.

"She's a really sweet snake," said Bolduc, adding there will be a snake-naming contest during the grand opening.

Bolduc said it has been wonderful to watch the museum take shape before her eyes, and is excited for all the programs on the horizon. She said while most children's museums take between five and 10 years to get from the conception stage to a running museum, working on the project since 2001, "We are ahead of schedule."

After the grand opening, the Our World museum hours will be Wednesday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. with Saturdays from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. being added during the month. Admission is free for members or $5 per person. For more information on the Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum and updated museum hours, please visit its Web site at www.ourworld-cgdm.org or call director Michele Bolduc at (781) 383-3198.

Share the road plan idling

intersection to Little Harbor and Beach Street are possibly some of the most spectacular coastal views. The drive is on par or better than Newport or Kennebunkport," said Brewer. "A lot of people don't actually go for a walk in this area when they might like to," due to its inaccessibility, he said.

There are also safety concerns, he said. Brewer pointed out the roads along the coast are very narrow, there are no sidewalks, and ledge outcroppings make it difficult to see around corners.

After conducting research, Brewer said he learned the average car driving 30 mph has a site line of approximately 200 feet. That means a pedestrian has roughly four seconds to get out of the way of an oncoming car. With the situation as it stands along the coast, parents with baby strollers, the elderly, and pedestrians and cyclists in general may not feel safe on the roads.

"I have discussed it with the police and fire chiefs and the board of health and town planner," said Brewer, adding while there are many facets of the proposal to be worked out, it would accomplish a major goal of the town's master plan — promoting walking and biking around town.

Brewer said he realizes the proposal will affect homeowners who live along the route. The one-way traffic pattern will take place from the intersection of Forest Avenue and Jerusalem Road, down Jerusalem Road until it turns into Atlantic Avenue, then up Beach Street to the Common. But by having the one-way traffic change take place on Sundays only it will allow the road to be shared at a time when it will least affect residents in the area.

Selectmen said they found the proposal interesting, but had concerns about the impact to residents who live along the streets involved and would not feel comfortable making any recommendations until they heard from those affected.

In addition to resident feedback, Selectmen said they would like to hear about the specifics of the initiative. Selectman Michael Sullivan said if cones are going to be used to block the roads, it is important to know who will be responsible for putting out and bringing in those cones. If cones must be purchased, Sullivan wanted to know who would buy them and what they would cost.

Brewer said he would be very willing to work with town boards and residents who have concerns to make the proposal work.

A time has not yet been scheduled for a public hearing to take place on Brewer's proposal. In the meantime, Town Manager Bill Griffin said concerned residents may send written comments to him at Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave. The next scheduled meeting of the board is Oct. 4, but there may not be room on the agenda to accommodate the public hearing. For more information, please call the selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105 and check the Mariner for updates.

Historical society seeks home for antique trucks

Pratt said the society has looked into many options, including adding on to the Maritime Museum, but no clear answers have emerged.

Pratt said the historical society understands the garage is currently being used for town storage and could pose a problem. Town Manager Bill Griffin said it is his understanding the garage holds items for the Farmer's Market and other events held on the Common. He said he believes there is also a generator for the sewer department and other miscellaneous items being stored.

Pratt said while he understands the garage is in a historic district and any renovations would have to comply with the regulations of the district. In addition, he said if the garage is expanded, it could not only house the pumpers, but storage could be improved for the town.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said in his opinion, the pumper trucks are "works of art" and he would like to see a way to display them properly. "Generally, I'm favorable," he said, about pursuing the idea of displaying the trucks in the garage.

Chairman Fred Koed agreed and said, "It's certainly something worth looking into."

The historical society will begin looking into potential costs of renovations, what change is allowed in the district, and if transforming the garage is feasible. The board of selectmen will be required to vote before any changes take place. For more information, please call the selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105 or the historical society at (781) 383-1434.

Cohasset residents are gearing up for their annual walk to benefit diabetes foundation.

Walking with purpose

By Catherine O'Callaghan
CORRESPONDENT

Finn Doherty of Cohasset, like so many other children, was a happy, enthusiastic, and energetic 2-year-old. He had just had his two-year check up and was in great health and right on course with his growth and development. His parents, Suzy and Sean Doherty, noticed that Finn was suddenly having a noticeable increase in wet diapers, was wetting through his diapers at night and seemed ravenously thirsty.

Suzy brought him to the pediatrician, who ran some tests, and Finn was diagnosed with type 1 diabetes or juvenile diabetes. Type 1 diabetes is an autoimmune disease in which the body's immune system attacks and destroys the insulin-producing cells of the pancreas. Finn's and the Dohertys' lives changed in that instant.

Finn is now nearly 5 years old. To stay alive, Finn must receive daily multiple insulin injections or continually infuse insulin through a pump. Finn's parents test his blood sugar by pricking his fingers for blood eight or more times per day. They balance Finn's insulin doses with his food intake and daily activities. Suzy and Sean must always be prepared for serious hypoglycemic (low blood sugar) and hyperglycemic (high blood sugar) reactions in Finn, both of which can be life-limiting and life threatening.

Up until this winter, Finn received on average four insulin shots a day to regulate his sugar. In February he received an insulin pump which allows his insulin levels to be administered through the push of some buttons and provides a continuous infusion of insulin. His parents still check Finn's sugar by finger pricks throughout the day and night, but Finn does not need the constant injections that he had before. Instead, his parents refill and connect the pump to Finn every other night via a small plastic needle that stays inside of Finn all the time.

Finn's positive attitude has never wavered. He endures the constant interruptions in his life of sugar checks and insulin monitoring with enormous patience. Finn goes to nursery school, likes to play baseball, swim and ride his bike. He plays with friends and his sister, Annabel. He is similar to any other four year old, except that his pancreas don't produce insulin.

More than 1 million Americans have type 1 diabetes. Each year more than 13,000 children are diagnosed with diabetes in the U.S. That's 35 children diagnosed every day. It strikes suddenly, is most often diagnosed in childhood, and carries the constant threat of deadly complications. It is a lifetime disease for which there is currently no cure.

The Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation (JDRF) was founded in 1970 by parents of children with type 1 diabetes.

On Oct. 1 JDRF is sponsoring Walk To Cure Diabetes in Boston. In 2003, the Dohertys, along with family and friends organized a team, Cohasset Kids For A Cure, to walk in this event. Cohasset Kids For A Cure has raised more than $41,000 on behalf of JDRF. Local sponsors including Goodwin Graphics, Shoe Market Kids, Scituate Racquet and Fitness, Dean & Hamilton and JP Morgan have contributed to fund the T-shirts for the walk and research of JDRF.

In the last two years, more than 50 people of all ages walked for Cohasset Kids For A Cure. The Walk To Cure Diabetes includes plenty of entertainment, food, kids' activities, and fun. It is an easy walk around the Esplanade in Boston followed by a party back at the Hatch Shell featuring dance band, the Marsels.

This years 5K walk is being held at the DCR Hatch Shell in Boston on Saturday, Oct. 1. Registration is at 9:30 a.m. and the walk start time is at 10:30 Anyone interested in walking with Cohasset Kids for a Cure is encouraged to sign up on www.jdrf.org or call Suzy Doherty at 781-383-2646. For those unable to walk but interested in supporting Cohasset Kids for a Cure or want more information about JDRF can visit www.jdrf.org .

A rivalry renewed

Archies, Cohasset gridders battle to 14-14 tie

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Add another exciting chapter to what is becoming one of the South Shore's best gridiron rivalries.

After struggling all night to move the ball against a Cohasset defense that looked markedly improved from their first game, the visitors from Archbishop Williams made three big plays when it mattered most, and came away from CHS's Alumni Field with a 14-14 tie.

Up 14-6, the Skippers fumbled (their third lost fumble of the night; Archies lost four) with 5:04 to go in the game gave the Bishops the ball at the Cohasset 27. On the ensuing possession, a 12-yard pass from Chris Costello (Weymouth) to Braintree's Brian Gleavy set up a fourth-and-1 at the 6.

After a timeout, Costello ran a quarterback sneak and was met by a big hit from Cohasset linebacker Dan McCarthy. The ball was spotted just far enough for a first down, and three plays later, Costello found Gleavy again for the touchdown with 55 seconds left.

Archies went for the tying two-point conversion, and got it when Costello ran a play-action bootleg to the right and reached the corner of the end zone before the Cohasset defense.

After last year's game that saw the Skippers win 14-6 in Braintree, Archies head coach Bill Kinsherf said he was pleased to see the progress his team has made against the two-time defending South Shore League champions.

"This was a good battle between two good football teams," Kinsherf said. "This is the closest we've come against them. This has become a pretty good fight; it's always been close between us."

Both among the best Div. 3 programs in the state, Cohasset and Archies could very well meet again in the Super Bowl. That meeting nearly took place last season, as Archies made it to the final game, but the Skippers were ousted by Tri-Valley League champion Westwood.

As the coaches got together in the postgame handshake, the phrase "Maybe we'll see you in December" could be

A successful Crusade

Cohasset tops Carver in Tuesday SSL tussle

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

CHS boys soccer head coach Rob Leary admitted he was nervous heading into Tuesday's match with Carver.

It's not that he lacks confidence in his team. Rather, it had been 11 days since they last played a game, and there was legitimate concern about the Skippers being a little rusty for their South Shore League opener with the Crusaders.

As it turns out, there was nothing to worry about. The Skippers (2-1, 1-0) ran out to a 4-0 halftime lead, and cruised from there to a 5-0 victory.

Leary said afterward his team was clicking on just about all cylinders.

"We controlled the ball very well and moved it around the whole field," he said. "Our forwards sent it back when they had to, and we switched fields really well."

It was another balanced effort for Cohasset, as four different players scored the first half goals.

Sam Roth got the first in the 20th minute, as he put in the rebound of a shot from teammate Andrew Clark. Aidan Buick made it 2-0 shortly thereafter with a great left-footed shot from 22 yards out that beat the Crusaders' keeper at the top left corner of the net.

Brandon Smith and Clark closed out the first half scoring. Smith's goal, assisted by Buick, came on nice, low shot from 16 yards out. Midfielder Emerson Oronte helped set up Clark's goal with a feed from the corner. Clark took the pass with his back to the net, touched once and turned

Cohasset women run to "Reach the Beach" in NH

This past weekend, 12 women (eight Cohasset, four Hingham) ran the Reach the Beach race in New Hampshire. This is a 212 mile relay running road race. It runs from Bretton Woods New Hampshire to Hampton Beach New Hampshire. The team completed the race in 31 hours and 41 minutes, placing third in the all women's category.

The squad began running at 8:40 a.m. and ran through the night and rain to the finish line. While this race does raise money for the NH state park system - it was a race the team did just because it was there. The squad's name was Breaking Wind (obviously there was some humor involved).

This was the 7th running of this race and this year 300 teams from all over the world participated.

Girls soccer wins league opener

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

Carver has long been a tricky opponent for the Cohasset girls soccer team.

It often seems that games between these two come down to a late goal or a silly mistake, and the Skippers find themselves on the wrong end of a 2-1 or 3-2 game.

Not so on Tuesday.

Freshmen Gabby Flibotte scored two goals, and classmate Sarah Coggins one in Tuesday's 3-1 victory at Carver.

Cohasset had not played since Sept. 8, when they were handed a 6-1 defeat at the hands of Scituate. The extra time between games apparently did the Skippers some good, and in what has been a trend for the team early in the season, it was the ninth graders that carried the load offensively.

The program recently picked up six more kids in the JV program, which allowed head coach Deb Beal to call up a few more young players to the varsity roster, which now has 20 girls.

And it is a pretty young group: Beal started four freshmen against the Crusaders, and at one point had five on the field at once. One that impressed the coach on Tuesday was winger Kristin Monaco.

"She's a small kid, but she plays big," Beal said. "She did a great job [Tuesday]. She's quick and she has great individual moves. She can be going against two defenders, and she will find a way to get through them."

Golfers tee off on Norwell

By Ben Libby

The Cohasset golf team is sure making a name for themselves in the South Shore League after their huge victory over Norwell at Cohasset Golf Club.

In the 34.5-19.5 win Tuesday, Mark Bouchard won medalist honors. The senior captain shot his best round ever with a 3-over 39, while capturing an important 6.5 points for the Skippers.

Cohasset's Kevin Barber and Norwell's Cody Cavicchi, considered two of the best players in the league, halved their No. 1 match after each shot a 4-over 40 on the par-36 course.

Cohasset captured all four remaining matches on the day. Zach Murray won No. 3 with a 6-over 42, giving Cohasset 5.5 valuable points. Also, Chris Bryan and Charlie Czerkawski won their respective matches at No. 4 and 5 with (6-3) and (7-2) triumphs, while shooting 45 and 40, respectively.

Coach Torin Sweeney was very impressed with his team's performance in the win.

"Everyone is playing well," said the coach. "However, for those three [Bryan, Murray, Czerkawski] to come in and win varsity matches when they really didn't play on varsity last year is big for the team."

It had been raining for a good part of the day Tuesday,

Beal said she thinks Monaco and freshman striker Torey Hart - who scored a hat trick in the team's season opener - will form a great 1-2 punch on offense.

The coach also sung the praises of Coggins, who scored the game's first goal with a well-placed shot from the edge of the box.

"Sarah just works so hard defensively and, when she gets an offensive opportunity, she usually dishes it off," Beal said. "Today, she was greedy for a reason. She really banged that one in."

Flibotte scored the game's next two goals, thanks in part to her tenacity on the offensive end.

"She's a little fighter," Beal said. "I like her a lot; she's a good athlete."

Junior Kara Wilcox played a strong game at center midfield, distributing the ball well to create numerous chances for Cohasset.

Beal says the overall performance of her team's underclassmen, both in games and practices, have set a new tone for the program.

"I think the tempo has been taken up a notch," Beal said. "You can either work to be in that 11, or you can slide by and sit on the bench."

Another athlete that has stepped up recently is senior keeper Melissa Crowley-Buck, who last week was named the team's third captain, joining Emilie Shea and Katie Bolger.

"Melissa has been great and upbeat about everything," Beal said. "I think she deserves [the captaincy], and the team was very receptive to it."

The Skippers have some talented juniors in Colleen Richardson, Haley Haracz, Emily Coggins, Lindsay Durkin and Christina Pinkus, and Beal believes when that group, the seniors and the freshmen are all on the same page...

"It's going to be a pretty game to see," she said. "Right now, the thoughts are there, but they just can't execute it. That will get better with time."

After hosting Harwich yesterday and Hull this Monday (6:30 kickoff), Cohasset will get their biggest test of the year on Wednesday when they host defending league champion Norwell, also at 6:30.

Golfers tee off on Norwell

and Sweeney said that was an advantage for his team on its home course.

"The wet conditions at Cohasset certainly favored us because we were able to adjust from the practice round we had on Monday," he said.

The beauty of playing at home is that players get to know their course well, and it paid off for Cohasset on Tuesday. With the win, Cohasset moves to 4-1 overall and 3-1 in the South Shore League.

One can only hope that boys continue their fine play as Cohasset and Harwich are tied atop the league with one loss each. Cohasset traveled to Cape Cod Academy on Wednesday and on Thursday played a tough Carver team, whom Sweeney said, "plays their home course well."

The Skippers get their rematch with Harwich this Tuesday at the CGC. The Rough Riders won in Harwich on Sept. 8, 31-24, and the rematch could very well determine the league title.

Cohasset can't tame Cougars

By Evan Deutsch
CORRESPONDENT

No team wants to start off their season with a tie and a loss.

But that's exactly where the Cohasset field hockey team finds itself at this early point in the season.

Last Thursday, the Lady Skippers fizzled faster than Hurricane Ophelia did off the Massachusetts coastline. After a tight first half, they folded quickly against the hard-hitting offense of the Notre Dame Cougars. Final score: NDA 4, Cohasset 1.

This just wasn't the Skippers' game. The Cougars controlled the match aside from a goal by Cohasset sophomore Corinna Durham on an assist from junior Caitlin Hurley.

"Cohasset had opportunities to score," said head coach Deb Bostwick. "We just couldn't find the net."

Bostwick also cited some solid offensive play by senior co-captains Katie James and Remy Lee. Senior co-captain Mia Lieb-Lappen slowed the NDA progress in the midfield area.

Also, senior co-captain Katherine Whoriskey and sophomore Sally Meehan energized the Cohasset defense during the first half.

Yet the Lady Skippers could not stop NDA sophomore McKenna Teague, who racked up all four of the Cougars' goals. Teague lives in Cohasset, and some people must wonder what the Cohasset team would be like had Teague attended CHS rather than Notre Dame.

The jury still remains out on whether Cohasset will fare better against league teams like Harwich, Mashpee and Norwell (rematch coming this Thursday in Cohasset). Time will tell.

For now, Cohasset must focus upon pooling its talent together and making things happen from a scoring standpoint. Let's not dwell on the tough start. A team with heart is better than a team with talent, so the Skippers should be able to turn their season around.

The Skippers square off this week against Harwich and Mashpee, both perennial league powerhouses. Cohasset will need to come out firing if they want to boost up their record.

"Harwich is a tough team," admitted senior sweeper Ellen Tarpey. "They have a lot of individual talent. If we can put it all together, though, things will start happening for us."

A successful Crusade

around his mark for a shot from just outside the goal mouth.

Early in the second half, Buick got his second goal of the game. Roth sent him through with a good ball, and Buick ran past his defender and got to it with only the keeper to beat, and he made it count.

Trevor Brady played another solid game in defense for Cohasset, and Prescott Busk, while not tested all too often, did make a key first half save. With the score still 1-0, a Carver striker had the ball on a breakaway one-on-one with the Skippers' senior keeper. Busk made a great save to preserve his clean sheet.

Leary also praised the play of winger Chris Ofsthun, whose runs down the flank helped open things up in the middle of Carver's defense.

"Chris runs the field well. He keeps our shape and stays wide to keep his defender out there," Leary said. "He was one of the reasons we were able to score five goals. He's just a very unselfish player."

Typically a very strong side, Carver is a little down this year because of a very young roster. The Crusaders have just one senior, and while Leary says he expects Carver to be strong again in the near future, he knew his team's experience would prove to be an advantage.

"They were young and inexperienced," Leary said. "When we got out to that big lead at the half, I knew it was over. Young teams usually don't know how to deal with a deficit like that."

The score line allowed the Skippers coach to empty his bench in the second half. He carried 22 boys - including six from the JV squad - and all of them got onto the pitch.

The Skippers will now be put to the test with a run of five games in nine days, beginning with yesterday's road match at Harwich. All of the games, in fact, are on the road: Saturday at Abington (10 a.m. kickoff), Monday at Hull (4 p.m.), Wednesday at Norwell (6:30) and Friday at Mashpee (4).

The Abington match is make-up of last Thursday's washout. The boys' next home game is not until Oct. 6, when they host the Green Wave at 6:30.

Shane Dorian, shown here in action against Nantucket, ran for 73 yards and a touchdown last Friday against Archbishop Williams.

A rivalry renewed

heard. Cohasset head coach Tony Rolfe said he doesn't want to think that far ahead, but acknowledged that it would likely make for another great game.

"This has become a great rivalry," Rolfe said. "[Tonight] was a slugfest, a really tough game. Obviously, we're disappointed we tied, but for the most part we have to be happy with the play we played."

After Archies' first fumble of the game gave Cohasset the ball at the 50, the Skippers scored six plays later on a Shane Dorian 12-yard run off a well-executed draw play. Passes of eight and 11 yards from Anthony DiPaolo to Nick Zappalo were also key to the drive.

The extra point from Robert Murley, who continues to make a difference in the kicking and punting game (including a 43-yard boot in the first quarter) made it for 7-0 for Cohasset.

That is how the first half would end. The rain and generally messy field conditions had their effect on the offenses, as the teams combined for four turnovers in the half. Khori Witter (Dorchester) and James Kerrigan (Plymouth) had some nice runs for the Bishops, but the turnovers killed a few drives that had gotten off to promising starts.

The Bishops got on the board in the third quarter, starting their drive at the Cohasset 39 after a Skippers fumble. Kerrigan ran for 12 on the next play. The senior running back effectively settled the Archies offense in the second half, rushing for 41 yards and not putting the ball on the ground.

Two players later, the visitors found paydirt as Costello completed a quick swing pass to Quincy's Joe Tran, who shed a couple Cohasset tacklers to find the end zone. A missed extra point meant Cohasset still had a 7-6 lead.

The Skippers would break through again on the second play of the fourth quarter. On a fourth-and-3 from the Bishops' 20, DiPaolo ran a bootleg to the right and with the aid of a nice downfield block from wide receiver Fletcher Smallzel, went all the way to the end zone.

"This has become a great rivalry. [Tonight] was a slugfest, a really tough game. Obviously, we're disappointed we tied, but for the most part we have to be happy with the play we played."

Cohasset head coach
Tony Rolfe

Big runs from Dorian and fullback P.J. McCaw contributed to the eight-play, 54-yard drive. The middle of Cohasset's line - center Nick Cambi and guards Paul St. Pierre and Nick Arment - opened some big holes in the trenches.

"Both teams had to deal with the turnovers, but there were times that I thought we were moving the ball pretty well," Rolfe said. "But then, there were a couple instances where [Archbishop Williams] picked up the rhythm."

After Cohasset's score, the defense stopped Archies and forced a punt. Costello made a nice 38-yard kick that was downed at the Cohasset 17. Two players later, the Skippers fumbled to set up the Bishops' game-tying drive.

The schedule doesn't get any easier for Archies, as they host Duxbury this Saturday morning at 10. Cohasset, meanwhile, will take on Cardinal Spellman Saturday at 2 p.m., at Spellman. The Cardinals are coming off a 28-0 loss at Norwell last Friday.

Cohasset Youth Baseball Major League tryouts

The tryout for the 2006 CYBSA major league baseball season will be held on Saturday, Sept. 24th at Chase Field at 1 p.m.

All boys and girls who are 10, 11 or 12 years old as of April 30, 2006 who wish to play in the CYBSA major league baseball division and who are not currently on a CYBSA major league baseball team are eligible and invited to tryout.

All eligible 12-year olds who try out will be assigned to a major league team; however, all eligible 12-year olds must attend the tryout to be assigned to a major league team. Players should register at Barnes Field beginning at 12:30 p.m. The tryouts should run till approximately 4 p.m.

This will be the only opportunity to try out. The rain date will be Saturday, Oct. 1. If the tryout is rained out, it will be announced on the CYBSA web site at cybsa.org on the morning of Sept. 24.

Questions may be directed to either Liam O'Connell at 781-383-9538 or Nancy Froio at 781-383-1897.

Baseball club looking for players

Henry's Baseball Club in Waltham is looking for players between the ages of 17 and 40 to play in its current fall ball league.

Games are played on Sunday's at 11 a.m. The club plays year-round, with a winter indoor league and spring competition also.

The club is also looking for coaches, helpers and volunteers. For more information or to sign up, call Henry at (781)891-0621.

Seadogs tryouts

The first in a series of clinic/tryout sessions for the nationally renown Seadogs/AAU Travel Team Baseball Program's 2006 season will be conducted Sept. 10-11 at fields in Braintree, Norwood and East Bridgewater.

The Seadogs will field seven teams in 2006:10-and-under through and including 16-and-under. Players are selected from a series of clinic/tryouts held throughout this fall. The cut-off day to determine proper age group for 2006 teams is July 31, 2006.

The 2005 Seadogs enjoyed their most successful season, highlighted by the 12-and-Under team's Silver Medal performance in the AAU National Championships.

Marshfield Road Runners 20K "A Race by Runners for Runners"

The Marshfield Road Runners will host their 32nd Annual 20K Road Race on Sunday, September 25, 2005. The race begins at noon from Marshfield High School and travels along a scenic and challenging route through North Marshfield before returning to the high school.

Many runners use this 12.4 mile community race as a tune-up for their fall marathons.

Members of the Marshfield Road Runners support the race and provide water stops and encouragement along the way.

At the post race party, there will be refreshments and prizes awarded proportional to the number of entries in each age category. There is a $100 prize to the first male and female finisher.

The race entry fee, the lowest around, is $8 before 9/11 and $10 after 9/11 and up until day of race registration, which begins at 10:30 a.m. Race T-shirts cost an additional $10, for pre-registrants only. Entry forms are available on line at www.marshfield.net/roadrunners/clubevents/20kcourse.html or sign up at www.active.com.

For more info, email Marianne Withington at mrr20k@yahoo.com or call 508-747-2491.

Proceeds from the race benefit the MRR Youth Track Series.

OBITUARIES

Frances Wakeman

Women's national sailing champion; dedicated community volunteer

Frances McElwain Wakeman, 91, of Cohasset, died Sept. 19, 2005, peacefully at her home, in Cohasset where she lived for most of her life.

Daughter of the late Mary B. and J. Franklin McElwain, she grew up in Boston and Cohasset, attended Beaver Country Day School, and Bennington College in Vermont, where she was a member of the inaugural class.

Married to Samuel Wakeman for 44 wonderful years until his death in 1986, Frannie Wakeman had a full and varied life. She participated in her husband's many activities while he was manager of the Bethlehem Steel Hingham and Quincy Shipyards, helping him with the launching of ships and entertaining of dignitaries.

She and her husband Sam were instrumental in the acquisition of World's End by the Trustees of Reservations. She took a vital interest in her community, participating in the Boston Junior League, the Vincent Club, the Museum of Fine Arts, the Institute of Contemporary Art, Mariner's House of Boston, the Cohasset Garden Club, Cohasset Yacht Club, St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Meals on Wheels, and the Cohasset Senior Shuttle.

An avid sportswoman, Frannie was an accomplished horseback rider, badminton player, skier, tennis player, paddle tennis player, field hockey player, and even played golf on occasion. But sailing was her first love.

Frances McElwain Wakeman

She loved the ocean and was a dedicated and enthusiastic sailor. She won the Women's National Sailing Championship Mrs. Charles Frances Adams Trophy, four times in a row in 1935, 36, 37 and 38. She also won the Massachusetts Bay Championship Mrs. George E. Hills Trophy in 1935, 36, 37, 38 and 39. She and her husband were founding members of the International 210 Class and actively participated with "Firefly" and "Sisu" from 1944 through 1965.

A devoted supporter of women's sailing, Frannie served as a trustee of the Adam's Trophy from 1947 through 2001. She participated as a judge for numerous U.S. Sailing events and was named judge emeritus by U.S. Sailing in 1994. In 1981, the Yacht Racing Union of Massachusetts Bay, now Mass Bay Sailing, awarded her its Distinguished Service to Yachting Award. In 2003 the New England Women's Fund recognized Mrs. Wakeman's many contributions to furthering women in sports by inducting her into The New England Women's Sports Hall of Fame. The U.S. Sailing Women's National Championship Sportsman Trophy, New England Women's Junior Single Handed Trophy, and Massachusetts Bay Women's Championship Trophy are all named in her honor.

She leaves her four children, Nancy Wakeman of San Francisco, Calif., Sam Wakeman of Cohasset, Judy Ferenbach of Townsend, Vt., and Susan Davis of Wellesley; and four grandchildren.

A memorial service will be held Saturday, Oct. 1 at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave., Cohasset, at 11 a.m. Arrangements by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers donations may be made to St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in Cohasset.

St. Stephen's worship schedule for Sept. 23

Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church: 16 Highland Ave., 781-383-1083, Web site: www.ststephenscohasset.org.

Clergy: the Very Rev. E. Clifford Cutler, Rector; the Rev. Beth Wheatley-Dyson, Assistant Rector.

Sunday Worship: Holy Communion 8 and 10 a.m.

Church School, nursery through grade 5, meets at 10 a.m.

Fellowship for the whole parish follows the 10 a.m. worship.

Parish picnic this Sunday on Cohasset Common.

Christian Meditation, Monday evenings at 7:30 p.m.

Mothers' Play Group, Tuesdays at 10 a.m.

Midweek Eucharist with prayers for healing on Wednesdays at 9:30 a.m. followed by Bible Study.

Evening Prayer for World Peace, Wednesdays at 5:30 p.m.

Alpha Course Wednesdays at 7 p.m.

Saturday Morning Bible Fellowship at 7 a.m.

All are welcome.

In the Scripture lessons for the Nineteenth Sunday after Pentecost, Ezekiel teaches that individuals are responsible for their own sins and must now repent, no longer blaming their troubles on the sins of their elders. Paul bids the new disciples to be of one mind in love in their calling to an obedient working out of faith. In Matthew's gospel Jesus tells a parable of two sons who obeyed their father differently, and he indicates that it is the same with those who are apparently obedient and disobedient in this age.

Preacher: the Very Rev. E. Clifford Cutler.

Historical Society to thank volunteers

Hosting events, cataloguing collections, arranging collections storage, preparing exhibits, fund-raising, teaching afternoon workshops, maintaining the landscape at the Pratt, greeting visitors and assisting in the office, are just a few of the many responsibilities of Cohasset Historical Society volunteers.

The society invites residents to its fall Volunteer Appreciation Day, Wednesday, Sept. 28, from 2 to 4 p.m. Whether you have been volunteering at the society or are interested in becoming a volunteer, you are welcome to attend. Come talk with current volunteers and hear about their experiences and the delightful camaraderie. Light refreshments will be served.

Call 781-383-1434 to reserve your spot.

Art Center sponsors day trip to MOMA

The South Shore Art Center in Cohasset is sponsoring a day trip to New York City and the Museum of Modern Art Saturday, Oct. 22, leaving the art center by motorcoach at 6 a.m., and arriving in New York City by 10:30 a.m.

Fall is an ideal time to visit the "Big Apple" and explore the magnificent MOMA, home of the world's preeminent collection of modern and contemporary art. Visitors will be on their own to spend time in the newly renovated museum, enjoy lunch in the city, and depart in the early evening.

Cost of $125 includes transportation, admission to the museum, lunch, and a light dinner served aboard the motorcoach, on the return trip home. To reserve a space call 781-383-2787.

Slide talk Sept. 28 on Rainsford Island

"Rainsford Island: Resort to Reformatory," a slide presentation lecture by Boston Landmarks Commission archeologist Ellen Berkland on the archeology and history of Rainsford Island in Boston Harbor, will be given on Wednesday, Sept. 28, 1 p.m., at 3 North Main St.. Admission is free and open to the public.

From a farm, summer resort, quarantine hospital, almshouse and a boy's reformatory to eventually an abandoned 11 acres, Rainsford Island in Boston Harbor has served many since its 1636 occupation by Edward Rainsford. City archeologist Berkland will explain how one archeological field season and extensive documentary research shed light on the fascinating history of Rainsford Island. In addition to a review of archeological and historic evidence, the presentation examines the ways in which the island has served Boston for decades.

Brunch to be held for Sea Chest helpers

Present and future volunteers for Cohasset Sea Chest Consignment to be honored on Tuesday, Sept. 27, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Red Parrot, Hull.

Andi Merrill of Scituate and Collen Roth of Cohasset urged all volunteers to come to annual Sea Chest Consignment Shop brunch to be held at the Red Parrot, Hull Shore Drive, Nantasket Drive. Manager Andi Merrill urged present volunteers to bring a prospective volunteer as a guest as the shop is staffed by volunteers which enables the shop to give more proceeds to the non-profit organization Road to Responsibility whose mission is to provide opportunities for adults with disabilities. Their services also include recreational, residential and employment opportunities to their clients. They believe that "citizens with disabilities belong"...supporting them their privilege. Their executive offices are located in Marshfield.

To accommodate residents of the South Shore the Sea Chest will hold evening hours every Thursday in October, from 6 to 8 p.m. For consigning and buying. The shop is open Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.; Sunday from 1 to 4 p.m. Regular consigning for Fall are 10 to 11:30 a.m. Monday through Friday.

To volunteer or RSVP to the brunch call 781-383-2293.

Central air conditioning for homes with hot water or steam radiator heat.
If a home doesn't have forced air heat, installing ductwork for central air conditioning can mean major remodeling and expense. But a Unique Indoor Comfort® system doesn't require large metal ductwork, or major remodeling.
Cool air is delivered through small 2" flexible tubing that can easily be weaved through walls and ceilings, around studs and other obstacles. All that's visible are small, round outlets in every room. What's more, Unique Indoor Comfort® offers Lennox high efficiency air conditioning.
Proven in thousands of homes, easy to install Unique Indoor Comfort® is the central air conditioning solution for the older home.

Royal passport

Baltics cruise opens up whole worlds for a day

By FRAN GOLDEN

COPENHAGEN -- I didn't come here to visit the prince but I did in fact spot a Prince of Denmark (and not the Hamlet variety), proving a lot can happen on a 12-night cruise of the Baltic Sea.

Prince Joachim, the younger of the Danish princes, was departing the royal residence, Amalienborg Palace, in a Land Rover and drove right by me and my mother standing there gawking. It was a priceless moment.

What originally attracted me to the Celebrity Century sailing was not the possibility of royal-spotting but, as the cruise line's ads promise, the idea of experiences like sipping chilled martinis after a day of touring palaces in St. Petersburg, Russia.

Copenhagen and St. Pete were just two ports of call on an action-filled itinerary that included Stockholm (Sweden), Oslo (Norway), Tallinn (Estonia) and Helsinki (Finland). It was like a travel Pu-Pu platter, a taste of each for a day.

The Celebrity Century is a fine, 1,700-passenger ship with comfortable accommodations, food that's truly delicious and fine service by an international crew -- yes, like the ads say, you are treated royally. And the 1995-built ship is about to get even better thanks to a major $55 million overhaul -- the modernized vessel will cruise the Baltics again next summer.

The crowd on our cruise was about 60 percent American, 40 percent European with a variety of languages represented.

Fortunately, the 12-night itinerary was structured with several days at sea, so we were able to unwind and enjoy such activities as getting a pedicure and exercise classes (me) and library book discussions and lectures by a former British ambassador (Mom) and make the most of entertainment offerings ranging from the Greatest Xylophone Virtuoso in the World to a professional pickpocket to excellent production shows -- Simon Cowell should hear these singers.

A note to the wise: A couple of times during our sailing we hit fairly rocky seas. Bring medication if you get seasick. And the Baltic is not a warm-weather destination -- temps on our August cruise ranged from the high 50s to mid-70s.

At each port there was a good variety of shore excursions to choose from, although in most it was also easy to explore on your own (an exception being St. Petersburg).

The thing about a cruise is you can tailor your own experience. Here are some of my favorite Baltic memories.

Peace in Oslo

While Mom went on a shore excursion to see naked statues at Vigeland Sculpture Park (it's great, I've been before) and other sights, I headed to Oslo City Hall to see the mural-filled hall where the Nobel Peace Prize is awarded. On close inspection, the murals depict Norwegian resistance efforts during the five-year occupation of Norway by the Germans during World War II. Upstairs a formal banquet room is decorated with a mural of naked people frolicking on a beach -- I couldn't help wondering how that would play in Boston City Hall.

Nearby is the brand new and truly inspiring Nobel Peace Center, located in a converted, historic train station but inside all cutting edge, high tech lights flash, audio comes from odd places, and the stories of both hate and peace are told. The laureate hall of fame is particularly impressive, with the faces on Martin Luther King Jr., the Dalai Lama, et. al., on small video screens on sticks as if they were planted in a futuristic garden.

Swedish Sunshine

We arrived in Stockholm amid sunny skies, passing through the archipelago of 24,000 islands, most wooded and

HERALD PHOTO BY FRAN GOLDEN

Tallinn, Estonia, is full of breath-taking architecture that makes you feel like you stepped back in time.

some dotted with summer homes. Lunch was with Swedish friends at a funky vegetarian restaurant off the tourist path (Note to travelers: If you know someone in a city, look them up. You'll learn more about the local scene.) Then Mom and I explored Gamla Stan (Old Town), accessible by bridge from the city center, where the streets are narrow and cobblestoned and the buildings date from the 14th to the 19th centuries. Most are today shops and galleries (there are cafes aplenty, too). It's touristy, but delightful. And we visited Sweden's Royal Family, well, some of the impressively lavish rooms of their 680-room Royal Palace (for an admission charge, of course).

Hellooo Helsinki

I dragged Mom to one of my favorite buildings anywhere, the amazing early 1900s train station featuring a monumental design, with huge Egyptian-style figures out front, that has inspired set designers including the creators of the first Batman movie -- the look is impressively dark.

We stopped at a Marimekko shop where we bought several packages of brightly colored paper napkins (with the dollar weak against the euro, we passed on clothes and linens). I needed a walk, Mom was tired. So I saw her off on a scenic 1 1/2 hour harbor cruise while I walked the waterfront including the outdoor marketplace and to Senate Square, where the neoclassical architecture dates to about 1840 (and reflects Finlands one-time role as a Grand Duchy of Russia).

Taste of Tallinn

It poured in Tallinn as Mom headed off on an organized tour of historic churches and the like and I took my own walking tour in the Old City, where the Medieval ambience is well intact -- get off the main drag and you feel like you're really stepping back into history. I was a wet rat sloshing around in drenched sneakers, but the narrow, windng streets were fun to explore. I popped inside a couple of impressive galleries (the post-Soviet Estonians are doing interesting work in glass and textiles in particular) and had a delightful lunch in a sweet little tea shop that served the best creamy tomato soup I've ever had. I also wandered into some of the numerous antique shops in the Old City -- one shopkeeper tried to talk me into buying a plaster bust of former Soviet leader Brezhnev. Bronze Stalin busts seemed all the rage. And every shop had a stack of accordions for sale, cheap, out with the old, in with the new in Estonia.

From Russia With Love

There is a certain hesitation you feel when you get to Russia. Maybe it's the Cold War attitude remaining -- this was after all the old Evil Empire. Maybe, for me, it's the fact some of my grandparents left here because they had to. In any event when we got off the ship in St. Petersburg and a welcoming band was playing "When the Saints Go Marching In," Mom and I just had to crack up.

On a bus tour, we headed off to the famous Hermitage museum, where we were greeted by outdoor vendors selling stack dolls and t-shirts, all seeking U.S. dollars. Inside we walked through several ornate Winter Palace rooms and by the time we got to the art collection the museum was jam-packed with people and the viewing was difficult. But we did manage to squeeze a lot into 1 1/2 hours, from Botticelli and Leonardo (DaVinci) to Rembrandt to Renoir, Van Gogh and Matisse. Guide Elena was a big Bill Clinton fan and made a point of pointing out which paintings the former president viewed on a visit, including one called "Holy Mother in Grief" by Morales. "He is a great man. He had his problems. But he is a great man, Mr. Clinton," Elena said.

We forgot to have martinis before heading on a nighttime excursion, but did sip Russian champagne at a Russian ballet (the lead dancer in "Giselle" literally floated like a butterfly).

Copenhagen Charm

In Copenhagen, in addition to prince gawking, our exploration included Tivoli, the famous Victorian gardens/amusement park; the Little Mermaid statue, art at the Carlsberg beer-funded Gyptotek; and the Stroget, the city's long shopping street. We also stopped to have a lunch with an old friend, munching smoked salmon, herring and sweet little shrimp from Greenland, washed down with Tubourg, as she filled us in on our prince and other local trivia.

Yes, lots of experiences on a 12-night Baltics cruise.
